understood in opposition only to what they are opposed to, and not in opposition to what they are not opposed to. Waterland.

6. Inconsistency.

Reason can never permit the mind to reject a greater evidence to embrace what is less evident, nor allow it to entertain probability in opposition to knowledge and certainty. Locke.

To O'PPRESS, v. a. [from oppress, Latin.]

1. To crush by hardship or unreasonable severity.

Israel and Judah were oppressed together, and all that took them captives held them fast, they refused to let them go. Jeremiah.

Alas! a mortal most oppress'd of those Whom fate has loaded with a weight of woes. Pope.

2. To overpower; to subdue.

We're not ourselves,
When nature, being oppress'd, commands the mind
To suffer with the body. Shakespeare.

In blazing height of noon,
The sun oppress'd, is plunged in thickest gloom. Thomson.

OPPRESSION, n. f. [from oppression, Fr. from oppress.]

1. The act of oppressing; cruelty; severity.

If thou feelst the oppressions of the poor, marvel not at the matter, for he that is higher than the highest regards. Ecclesiastes.

2. The state of being oppressed; misery.

Famine is in thy cheeks;
Need and oppression stare within thine eyes,
Contempt and beggary hang upon thy back. Shakespeare.

Cæsar himself has work, and our oppression Exceeds what we expected. Shakespeare.

3. Hardship; calamity.

We are all subject to the same accidents: and when we see any under particular oppression, we should look upon it as the common lot of human nature. Addison.

4. Dulness of spirits; lassitude of body.

Drowsiness, oppression, heaviness, and lassitude, are signs of a too plentiful meal. Arbutnot.

OPPRESSIVE, adj. [from oppress.]

severe.

o. Heavy; overwhelming.

Alicia, reach thy friendly arm,
And help me to support that feeble frame,
That nodding totters with oppressive woe,
And sinks beneath its load. Rowe.

To ease the soul of one oppressive weight,
This quits an empire, that embroils a state. Pope.

OPPRESSOR, n. f. [from oppressor, Fr. from oppress.] One who harasses others with unreasonable or unjust severity.

I from oppressors did the poor defend,
The fatherless, and such as had no friend. Sandys.

The cries of orphans, and th' oppressor's rage,
Had reach'd the stars. Dryden.

Power when employed to relieve the oppressed,
and to punish the oppressor, becomes a great blessing. Swift.

OPPROBRIOUS, adj. [from opprobrium,
Latin.]

1. Reproachful; disgraceful; causing infamy; scurrilous.

Himself pronounceth them blessed, that should for his name sake be subject to all kinds of igno-myny and opprobrious malediction. Hooker.

They see themselves unjustly aspersed, and vindicate themselves in terms no less opprobrious than those by which they are attacked. Addison.

2. Blasted with infamy.

I will not here desile
My unstain'd verse with his opprobrious name. Daniel.

Solomon he led by fraud to build
His temple right against the temple of God,
On the opprobrious hill. Milton.

OPPROBRIOUSLY, adv. [from opprobrious.]

Reproachfully; scurrilously.

Think you, this little prating York
Was not incensed by his subtle mother,
To taunt and scorn you thus opprobriously? Shakespeare.

OPPROBRIOUSNESS, n. f. [from opprobrious.]

Reproachfulness; scurrility.

To OPPUGN, v. a. [from oppugno, Lat.] To oppose; to attack; to resist.

For the ecclesiastical laws of this land we are led by a great reason to observe, and ye be by no necessity bound to oppugn them. Hooker.

They said the manner of their impeachment they could not but conceive did oppugn the rights of parliament. Clarendon.

If nothing can oppugn his love,
And virtue envious ways can prove,
What cannot he confide to do
That brings both love and virtue too? Hudibras.

The ingredients reclude applications, mummy the blood, and oppugn putrefaction. Hartrey.

OPPUGNER, n. f. [from oppugn.] Opposition.

Take but degree away, untune that string,
And hark what discord follows, each thing meets
In woe's oppugnancy. Shakespeare.

OPPUGNANCY, n. f. [from oppugn.] One who opposes or attacks.

The modern and degenerate Jews be, upon the score of being the great patrons of man's free will, not cautiously esteemed the great oppugners of God's free grace. Boyle.

tion to signify wishing, which is called the optative mood. Clarke.

OPTICAL, adj. [from opticus.] Relating to the science of optics.

It seems not agreeable to what anatomists and optical writers deliver, touching the relation of the two eyes to each other. Boyle.

OPTICIAN, n. f. [from optick.] One skilled in opticks.

OPTICK, adj. [from optick; optique, Fr.]

1. Visual; producing vision; subservient to vision.

May not the harmony and discord of colours arise from the proportions of the vibrations propagated through the fibres of the optick nerves into the Linnæ, as the harmony and discord of sounds arise from the proportions of the vibrations of the air? Newton.

2. Relating to the science of vision.

Where our matter handleth the contractions of pillars, we have an optick rule, that the higher they are, the less should be always their diminution of light, to cause the eye itself doth contract all objects, according to the distance. Hutton.

OPTICK, n. f. An instrument of sight; an organ of sight.

Can any thing cleave the perspicuity of eyes which were before light, and in whose opticks there is no opacity? Brown.

Our corporal eyes we find,
Break the opticks of our mind. Denham.
You may neglect, or quench, or hate the flame,
Whole smoke too long obscur'd your rising name,
And quickly cold indifference will enure,
When you love's joys thro' honour's optick view. Prior.

Why has not man a micro-optick eye?
For this plain reason, man is not a fly.
Say what the rays were finer opticks fly'n,
To inspect a mote, not comprehend the heav'n? Pope.

OPTICKS, n. f. [from optick.] The science of the nature and laws of vision.

No light and body of what bigness soever illuminate the whole sphere of another, although it illuminate some thing more than half of a sphere, according to the distance of opticks. Brown.

There was a delectation must go to the admirable treatise of opticks by Sir Isaac Newton. Chapman.

OPTIMACY, n. f. [optimates, Lat.] Nobility; body of nobles.

In this high court of parliament there is a rare co-ordination of power, a wholesome mixture between monarchy, optimacy, and democracy. Howell.

OPTIMITY, n. f. [from optimus.] The state of being best.

OPTION, n. f. [optio, Lat.] Choice; election; power of choosing.

He declares to punish the contumacy finally, by assigning them their own options. Hannond.

Transplants must proceed from the option of the peer, i.e. the one found like an exile; to the colonies must be raised by the leave of the king, and not by his common law. Bacon.

Which of these two rewards we will receive, he hath left to our opt on. Smaltridge.

OPULENCE, n. f. [opulence, Fr. opulent.]

OPULENCE, n. f. [opulent, Latin.] Wealth; riches; affluence.

It must be a discovery of the infinite flatteries that follow youth and opulence. Shakespeare.

After eight years spent in outward opulence and inward misery, that it was not greater; after vast sums of money and great wealth gotten, he died unlamented. Clarendon.

He had been a person not only of great opulence, but authority. Atterbury.

There in full opulence a banker dwelt,
Who all the joys and pains of riches felt;
His side-board glitter'd with unnumber'd plate,
And his proud lady held a vast estate. Swift.

OPULENT, adj. [opulent, Fr. opulentus, Lat.] Rich; wealthy; affluent.

He made him his ally, and provok'd a mighty and opulent king by an offensive war in his quarrel. Bacon.

To begin with the supposed policy of gratifying only the rich and opulent: does our wife man think that the grandee whom he comes does not see through all the little plots of his courtship? South.

OPULENCE, adv. [from opulent.] Richly; with splendour.

OR, conjunct. [oben, Saxon.]

1. A disjunctive particle, marking distribution, and sometimes opposition.

Inquire what the ancients thought concerning this world, whether it was to perish or no; whether to be destroyed or to stand eternally? Barnet.
Be my table's homage should receive,
If I could write, or Holles could forgive. Garth.

By intense study, or application to business that requires little action, the digestion of foods will soon proceed more slowly, and with more uneasiness. Blackmore.

Every thing that can be divided by the mind into two or more ideas, is called complex. Watts.

2. It corresponds to either: he must either fall or fly.

At Venice you may go to any house either by land or water. Addison.

3. It sometimes, but rather inclegantly, stands for either.

For thy vast bounties are so numberless,
That them or to conceal, or else to tell,
Is equally impossible. Cowley.

4. Or is sometimes redundant, but is then more properly omitted.

How great to see the sins of any unreformed person are, Christ died for him because he died for all; only he must reform and forsake his sins, or else he shall never receive benefit of his death. Hannond.

5. [or, orpe, Sax.] Before: or ever, is before ever. Obsolete.

Or we go to the declaration of this psalm, it shall be convenient to shew who did write this psalm. Fisher.

The dead man's knell
Is there scarce lik'd for whom, and good men's lives
Expire before the flowers in their cups, Dying ere they sicken. Shakespeare.

Learn before thou speak, and use physick
Ere thou be sick. Eccelegiastus.

OR, n. f. [French.] Gold. A term of heraldry.

The show'ry arch
With lifted colours gay, or, azure, gules, Delights and puzzles the beholders eyes. Philips.

ORACH, n. f. [atriplex.] A plant.

There are thirteen species; garden orach was cultivated as a culinary herb, and used as spinach, though it is not generally liked by the English, but still esteemed by the French. Miller.

ORACLE, n. f. [orach, Fr. oraculum, Lat.]

1. Something delivered by supernatural wisdom.

The main principle whereupon our belief of all things therein contained dependeth, is, that the Scriptures are the oracles of God himself. Hooker.

2. The place where, or person of whom the determinations of heaven are inquired.

Why, by the verities on thee made good,
May they not be my oracles as well,
And let me up in hope? Shakespeare.

God hath now sent his living oracle
Into the world to teach his final will,
And sends his spirit of truth henceforth to dwell,
In pious hearts, an inward oracle,
To all truth requisite for men to know. Milton.

3. Any person or place where certain decisions are obtained.

There mighty nations shall enquire their doom,
The world's great oracle in times to come. Pope.

4. One famed for wisdom; one whose determinations are not to be disputed.

To ORACLE, v. n. [from the noun.] To utter oracles. A word not received.

No more shalt thou by oracling abuse
The gentiles. Milton.

ORACULAR, adj. [from oracle.]

ORACULOUS, adj. [from oracle.]

1. Uttering oracles; resembling oracles.

Thy counsel would be as the oracle of Urim and Thummim, those oraculous gems
On Aaron's breast, or tongue of fiers old Balaam. Milton's Paradise Regained.

Here Charles considered the situation of his forces
Here he related his neighbouring princes states;
What nation should have peace, where war was made,
Determin'd in this oraculous shade. Waller.

They have something venerable and oracular,
in that unadorn'd gravity and shortness in the expression. Pope.

The oraculous seer frequents the Pharian coast,
Proteus a name tremendous o'er the main. Pope.

2. Positive; authoritative; magisterial; dogmatical.

Though their general acknowledgments of the weakness of human understanding look like cold and sceptical discouragements; yet the particular expressions of their sentiments are as oraculous as if they were omniscient. Glaville's Scepia.

3. Obscure; ambiguous; like the answers of ancient oracles.

He spoke oracles and fly,
He'd neither grant the question, nor deny. King.

ORACULOUSLY, adv. [from oraculous.]

In manner of an oracle.

The testimonies of antiquity, and such as pass oraculously amongst us, were not always so exact as to examine the doctrine they delivered. Brown.

Hence arise the branching beech and vocal oak,

ORACULOUSNESS, n. f. [from oraculous.]

the state of being oracular.

ORATION, n. f. [oratio, Fr. oratio, Latin.]

Prayer; verbal supplication; or oral worship; more frequently written oration.

This word is pronounced both forth by Shakespeare and Dryden: oration is sometimes long and sometimes short.

St. A. let's hear the oration he makes. Shakespeare.

Bulwer's might threaten, not disturb her pray'r;
Hew'n had the best, it not the greater share:
An active life, long oration forlorn,
Yet still the pray'd, for still the pray'd by deeds. Dryden.

ORAL, adj. [oral, Fr. or, oris, Lat.] Delivered by mouth; not written.

Oral discourse, whose transient faults dying with the sound that gives them life, and so not subject to a strict review, more easily escapes observation. Locke.

St. John was appealed to as the living oracle of the church, and as his oral testimony lasted the first century, many have observed, that by a particular providence several of our saviour's disciples, and of the early converts, lived to a very great age; that they might personally convey the truth of the gospel to those times which were very remote. Addison.

ORALLY, adv. [from oral.] By mouth; without writing.

Oral traditions were incompetent without written monuments to derive to us the original laws of a kingdom, because they are complex, not orally transmissible to so great a distance of ages. Hale.

ORANGE, n. f. [orange, Fr. aurantia, Lat.]

The leaves have two lobes or appendages at their base like ears, and cut in form of a heart; the fruit is round and depresso, and of a yellow colour when ripe, in which it differs from the citron and lemon. The species are eight. Miller.

I will discharge him your firaw-coloured beard, your orange tawny beard. Shakespeare.

The notary came aboard, holding in his hand a fruit-like an orange, but of colour between orange tawny and scarlet, which call a most excellent odour, and is used for a preservative against infection. Bacon.

The ideas of orange colour and saffron, produced in the mind by the same infusion of human neplatinum, are no less distinct ideas than those of the same colours taken from two different bodies. Locke.

Fine oranges, sauce for your veal,
Are charming when liquored in a pot of brown ale. Shakespeare.

The punie granate op'd its rose-like flow'rs;
The orange bough'd its aromatic pow'rs. Hart.

ORANGERY, n. f. [orangerie, Fr.] Plantation of oranges.

A kitchen garden is a more pleasant sight than the field of oranges, or artificial green house. Speet.
ORANGEWORM. n. f. A species of pear.

ORANGETAWNEY. n. f. [orange and tawney.] Red, resembling an orange.

Harmonies, or knights of Nova Scotia, are commonly distinguished from others by a ribbon of orangecinnamon. Heulin.

ORANGEWIFE. n. f. [orange and wife.] A woman who sells oranges.

You wear out a good wholesome forenoon in hearing a cause between an orangewife and a toilet seller. Shakespeare.

ORATION. n. f. [oration, Fr. oratio, Lat.] A speech made according to the laws of rhetoric; a harangue; a declamation.

There shall I try,
In my oration, how the people take
The cruel issue of these bloody men. Shakespeare.

This gives life and spirit to every thing that is spoken, awakens the dullest spirits, and adds a singular grace and excellency both to the person and his oration. Watts.

ORATOR. n. f. [orateur, Fr. orator, Lat.]

1. A public speaker; a man of eloquence. Poor queen and son! your labour is but lost; For Warwick is a subtle orator. Shakespeare.

As when of old some orator renowned,
In Athens or free Rome, where eloquence Flourish'd, since mute to some great cause address'd, Stood in himself collected; while each part,
Motion, each act, won audience. Milton.

It would be altogether vain and improper in matters belonging to an orator to pretend to strict demonstration. Hobbes.

The constant design of both these orators in all their speeches, was to drive some one particular point. Swift.

I have listened to an orator of this species, without being able to understand one single sentence. Swift.

Both orators so much renown'd,
To their own depths of eloquence were drown'd. Dryden.

2. A petitioner. This sense is used in addresses to chancery.

ORATORICAL. adj. [from orator.] Rhetorical; befitting an orator.

Where he speaks in an oratorical, affecting, or persuasive way, let this be explained by other places where he treats of the same theme in a doctrinal way. Watts.

ORATORY. n. f. [oratorix ars, Lat.]

1. Eloquence; rhetorical expression. Each pasture filled with sheep feeding with sober security, while the pretty lambs with bleating outcry, craved the dams comfort. Sidney.

When a world of men
Could not prevail with all their oratory,
Yet hath a woman's kindness overrul'd. Shakespeare.

When my oratory grew toward end,
I bid them that did love their country's good,
Cry, God save Richard! Shakespeare.

Sighs now breath'd
Unutterable, which the spirit of pray'r
Inspir'd, and wing'd for heav'n with speedier flight
Than loudest orator. Milton.

By this kind of oratory, and professing to decline their own inclinations and wishes, purely for peace and unity, they prevailed over those who were still surpris'd. Clarendon.

Hammond's subjects were such as had greatest influence on practice, which he prest with most affectionate tenderness, making tears part of his oratory. Fell.

The former, who had to deal with a people of much more politeness, learning, and wit, had the greatest weight of his oratory upon the strength of his arguments. Swift.

Come hallelujah characters, that no one but,
Come Hallelujah oratory, O Hallelujah. Pope.

2. Exercise of eloquence.

The Romans had seized upon the fleet of the Antates, among which there were six armed with rorona, with which the consul Menenius adorned the public place of oratory. Arbutnot.

3. [oratoire, French.]

Oratory signifies a private place, which is deputed and allotted for prayer alone, and not for the general celebration of divine service. Ayliffe.

They began to erect to themselves oratories not in any sumptuous or stately manner, which neither was possible by reason of the poor state of the church, and had been perilous in regard of the world's envy towards them. Hooker.

Do not omit thy prayers for want of a good oratory or place to pray in; not thy duty for want of temporal encouragements. Taylor.

ORB. n. f. [orbe, Fr. orbis, Lat.]

1. Sphere; orbicular body.

A mighty collection of water inclosed in the bowels of the earth, constitutes an huge orb in the interior or central parts, upon the surface of which orb of water the terrestrial strata are expanded. Woodward.

2. Circular body.

They with a storm of darts to distance drive
The Trojan chief; who held at bay from far,
On his Vulcanian orb sustain'd the war. Dryden.

3. Mundane sphere; celestial body; light of heaven.

In the floor of heav'n
There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st,
But in his motion like an angel flings,
Sull quiring to the young-eyed cherubims. Shakespeare.

4. Wheel; any rolling body.

The orbs
Of his fierce chariot roll'd as with the found
Of torrent floods. Milton.

5. Circle; line drawn round.

Does the son learn action from the father? Yet all his activity is but in the epicycle of a family;
whereas a subject's motion is in a larger orb. Holid.

6. Circle described by any of the mundane spheres.

Astronomers, to solve the phenomena, framed to their conceit eccentricals and epicycles, and a wonderful engine of orbs, though no such things were. Bacon.

With smiling aspect you serenely move
In your fifth orb, and rule the realm of love. Dryden.

7. Period; revolution of time.

Self-begot, self rais'd,
By our own quick'ning power, when fatal course
Had ended his sad orb, the birth mature
Of this our native heav'n. Milton.

8. Sphere of action.

Will you again unknot
This churlish knot of all-abor'd war,
And move in that obedient orb again,
Where you did give a fair and nat'ral light? Shakespeare.

9. It is applied by Milton to the eye, as being luminous and spherical.

A drop serene hath quench'd their orbs,
Or dim suffusion veil'd. Milton.

ORBATON. n. f. [orbatus, Lat.] Privation of parents or children.

O'RED. adj. [from orb.]

1. Round; circular; orbicular.

All those sayings will I overlive,
And all those swearings keep as true in soul,
As doth that orb continue in the fire,
That fevers day from night. Shakespeare.

2. Formed into a circle.

Truth and justice then
We'll down return to men,
Orb'd in a rainbow, and like glories wearing. Milton.

3. Rounded.

A golden axle did the work uphold,
Gold was the beam, the wheels were orb'd with gold. Addison.

ORBITULAR. adj. [orbiculaire, Fr. orbiculatus, Latin.]

1. Spherical.

He shall monarchy with thee divide
Of all things, parted by th' empyreal bounds,
His quadrature from thy orbicular world. Milton.

2. Circular; approaching to circularity.

The form of their bottom is not the same; for whereas before it was of an orbicular make, they now look as if they were pressed. Addison.

By a circle I understand not here a perfect geometrical circle, but an orbicular figure, whose length is equal to its breadth, and which as to sense may seem circular. Newton.

ORBITULARLY. adv. [from orbicular.] Spherically; circularly.

ORBITULARNESS. n. f. [from orbicular.] The state of being orbicular.

ORBITULATED. adj. [orbiculatus, Latin.]

Moulded into an orb.

ORBIT. n. f. [orbita, Fr. orbita, Lat.]

1. The line described by the revolution of a planet.

Suppose more suns in proper orbits roll'd,
Disso'd the snows and chas'd the polar cold. Blackmore.

Suppose the earth placed nearer to the sun, and revolve for instance in the orbit of Mercury; there the whole ocean would even boil with extremity of heat, and be all exhaled into vapours; all plants and animals would be scorched. Bentley.

2. A small orb. Not proper.

Attend, and you discern it in the fair
Conduct and finger, or reclaim a hair;
Or roll the lucid orbit of an eye;
Or in full joy elaborate a sigh. Young.

ORBITITY. n. f. [orbis, Lat.] Loss, or want of parents or children. Bacon.

ORBY. adj. [from orb.] Resembling 'an orb. Not used.

It smote Atreides' orbie targe; but ranne not through the brasse. Chapman.

When now arose
The world was with the spring; and orbie hours
Had gone the round againe, through herbs and flowers. Chapman.

ORC. n. f. [orca, Lat. sepya.] A sort of sea fish.

An island salt and bare,
The haunt of seals and orcs, and sea-waves clang. Milton.

ORCHAL. n. f. A stone from which a blue colour is made. Ainsworth.

ORCHALIT. n. f. An herb. Ainsworth.

ORCHARD. n. f. [either hortyard or wort-yard, says Skinner; ortegard, Saxon, Junius.] A garden of fruit-trees.

Planting of orchards is very profitable, as well as pleasurable. Bacon.

They overcome their riches, not by making Paths, orchards, fish-pools. Ben Jonson.

His pastorage-house from an incommensurable he had rendered a fair and pleasant dwelling, with the conveniences of gardens and orchards. Fell.

Her private orchards wall'd on ev'ry side,
To lawless Sylvans all access deny'd. Pope.

ORCIESTRE. n. f. [Fr. orchestra.] The place, where the musicians are set at a publick show.

ORD. n. f. An edge or sharpness; as in ordhelm, ordbright, &c. and in the Icelandic tongue, ord signifies a spear or dart. Gibson.

Ord, in old English, signified beginning; whence probably the proverbial phrase odds [ords] and ends, for scraps or remnants, and perhaps ords for waste provision.

TO ORDAIN. v. a. [ordino, Lat. ordonner, French.]

1. To appoint; to decree.

Know the cause why music was ordain'd;
Was it not to refresh the mind of man?
After his studies, on his usual pain? Shakespeare.

Jeroboam ordain'd a feast.
As many as were ordain'd to eternal life, believed. 1 Kings.

He commanded us to testify that it is he which was ordain'd of God to be the judge of quick and dead. Acts.

To fools oppress'd and dumb with grief,
The gods ordain this kind relief. Ac.

That musick should in sounds convey What dying lovers deem not say. Walker.

The scene of death, and place ordain'd for punishment. Dryden.

My passion bends to what thy eyes ordain;
For I was born to love, and thou to reign. Prior.

1. To establish; to settle; to institute.
Mulmutius

Ordain'd our laws, whose use the sword of Cæsar Hath too much mangled. Shakespeare.

I will ordain a place for Israel. 1 Chronicles.
God from Sinai descending, will himself
In thunder, lightning, and loud trumpets sound, Ordain them laws. Milton.

Some laws ordain, and some attend the choice
Of holy senators, and elect by voice. Dryden.

3. To set in an office.
All signified unto you by a man, who is ordained over the affairs, shall be utterly destroyed. Ezher.

4. To invest with ministerial function, or sacerdotal power.

Meletius was ordained by Arian bishops, and yet his ordination was never questioned. Stillington.

ORDAIN, n. f. [from ordain.] He who ordains.

ORDAL, n. f. [ordal, Sax. ordalium, low
Lat. ordalie, Fr.] A trial by fire or water, by which the person accused appealed to heaven; by walking blindfold over hot bars of iron; or being thrown, I suppose, into the water; whence the vulgar trial of witches.

Their ordal laws they used in doubtful cases,
when clear proofs were wanted. Hakewill.

In the time of king John, the purgation perig-nem et aquam, or the trial by ordal, continued;
but it ended with this king. Hale.

ORDER, n. f. [ordo, Lat. ordre, Fr.]

1. Method; regular disposition.

To know the true state of Solomon's house, I will keep this order; I will set forth the end of our foundation, the instruments for our works, the feveral employments assigned, and the ordinances we observe. Bacon.

As St. Paul was full of the doctrine of the gospel; so it lay all clear and in order, open to his view. Locke.

2. Established process.

The moderator, when either of the disputants breaks the rules, may interpose to keep them to order. Watts.

3. Proper state.

Any of the faculties wanting, or out of order, produces suitable defects in men's understandings. Locke.

4. Regularity; settled mode.

This order with her sorrow she accords,
Which orderleth all form of order brake. Daniel.

Kings are the fathers of their country, but unless they keep their own estates, they are such fathers as the sun maintain, which is against the order of nature. Davenant.

5. Mandate; precept; command.

Give order to my servants, that they take
No note of our being absent. Shakespeare.

If the lords of the council issued out any order against them, or if the king sent a proclamation for their repair to their houses, presently some noblemen published a proclamation against those orders and proclamations. Clarendon.

Upon this new fright, an order was made by both houses for disarming all the papists in England; upon which, and the like orders, though seldom any thing was after done, yet it served to keep up the apprehensions in the people, of dangers and designs, and to disengage them from any reverence or affection to the queen. Clarendon.

When christianity became a distinct body, courts were set up by the order of the apostles themselves, to minister judicial process. Ketticworth.

I have received an order under your hand for a thousand pounds in words at length. Tutler.

6. Rule; regulation.

The church hath authority to establish that for an order at one time, which at another time it may abolish, and in both do well. Hooker.

7. Regular government.

The night, their number, and the sudden act
Would dash all order, and protect their fact. Daniel.

As there is no church, where there is no order, no ministry; so where the same order and ministry is, there is the same church. Pearson.

8. A society of dignified persons distinguished by marks of honour.

The several chairs of order look you scour,
With juice of balm and ev'ry precious flow'r. Shaksp.

Princes many times make themselves desires, and set their hearts upon toys; sometimes upon a building; sometimes upon erecting of an order. Bacon.

She left immortal trophies of her fame,
And to the noblest order gave the name. Dryden.

By shining marks, distinguish'd they appear,
And various orders various ensigns bear. Granville.

9. A rank, or class.

The king commanded the high priest and the priests of the second order, to bring forth out of the temple all the vessels. 2 Kings.

Th' Almighty feeling,
From his transcendent seat the saints among,
To those bright orders utter'd thus his voice. Milton.

Like use you make of the equivocal word dignity, which is of order, or office, or dominion, or
all together. Waterland.

10. A religious fraternity.

Find a bare foot brother out,
One of our order to associate me,
Here visiting the sick. Shakespeare.

11. [in the plural] Hierarchical state.

If the faults of men in orders are only to be judged among themselves, they are all in some sort parties. Dryden.

Having in his youth made a good progress in learning, that he might dedicate himself more entirely to religion, he entered into holy orders, and in a few years became renowned for his sanctity of life. Addison.

When Ouranius first entered into holy orders, he had haughtiness in his temper, a great contempt and disregard for all foolish and unreasonable people; but he has prayed away this spirit. Law.

12. Means to an end.

Virgins must remember, that the virginity of the body is only excellent in order to the purity of the soul: for in the same degree that virgins live more spiritually than other persons, in the same degree is their virginity a more excellent state. Taylor.

We should behave reverently towards the Divine Majesty, and justly towards men; and in order to the better discharge of these duties, we should govern ourselves in the use of sensual delights with temperance. Tillotson.

The best knowledge is that which is of greatest use in order to our eternal happiness. Tillotson.

What we see is in order only to what we do not see; and both these states must be joined together.
Atterbury.

One man pursues power in order to wealth, and another wealth in order to power, which last is the surer way, and generally followed. Swift.

13. Measure; care.

It were meet you should take some order for the soldiers, which are now first to be discharged and disposed of some way; which may otherwise grow to as great inconvenience as all this that you have quit us from. Spenser.

Provide me soldiers,
Whilst I take order for mine own affairs. Shaksp.

The money promised unto the king, he took no order for, albeit Sosthenes required it. 2 Maccabees.

If any of the family be distressed, order is taken for their relief and competent means to live. Bacon.

14. In architecture.

A system of the several members, ornaments, and proportions of columns and pilasters; or it is a regular arrangement of the projecting parts of a building, especially those of a column; so as to form one beautiful whole: or order is a certain rule for the proportions of columns, and for the figures which some of the parts ought to have on the account of the proportions that are given them. There are five orders of columns; three of which are Greek, viz. the Doric, Ionic, and Corinthian; and two Italian, viz.
the Tuscan and composite. The whole is composed of two parts at least, the column and the entablature, and of four parts at the most; where there is a pedestal under the column, and one scrotoe or little pedestal on the top of the entablature. The column has three parts: the base, the shaft, and the capital; which parts are all different in the several orders.

In the Tuscan order, any height being given, divide it into ten parts and three quarters, called diameters, by diameters is meant the thickness of the shaft at the bottom, the pedestal having two;
the column with base and capital, seven; and the entablature one and three quarters.

In the Doric order, the whole height being given, is divided into twelve diameters or parts, and one third; the pedestal having two and one third, the column eight, and the entablature two.

In the Ionic order, the whole height is divided into thirteen diameters and a half, the pedestal having two and two thirds, the column nine, and the entablature one and four fifths.

In the Corinthian order, the whole height is divided into fourteen diameters and a half, the pedestal having three, the column nine and a half,
and the entablature two.

In the composite order, the whole height is divided into fifteen diameters and one third; the pedestal having three and one third, the column ten,
and the entablature two.

In a columnnade or range of pillars, the intercolu-miation or space between columns in the Tuscan order, is four diameters. In the Doric order, two and three quarters; in the Ionic order, two and a quarter; in the Corinthian order, two; and in the composite order, one and a half. Builder's Dict.

TO ORDER, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To regulate; to adjust; to manage; to conduct.

To him that ordereth his conversation aright, will I shew the salvation of God. Psalms.

As the sun when it riseth in the heaven, so is the beauty of a good wife in the ordering of her house. Ecclesiasticus.

Thou hast ordered all in measure, number and weight. Wisdom.

Blas being asked how a man should order his life? answered, as if a man should live long, or die quickly. Bacon.

give direction.

So spake the universal Lord, and seem'd
So ordering. Milton.

ORDERER, n. f. [from order.] One that orders, methodises, or regulates.

That there should be a great disposer and orderer of all things, a wise rewarder and punisher of good and evil, hath appeared so equitable to men, that they have concluded it necessary. Buckling.

ORDERLESS, adj. [from order.] Disorderly; out of rule.

All form is formless, order orderless,
Save what is opposite to England's love. Shakespeare.

ORDERLINESS, n. f. [from orderly.] Regularity; methodicalness.

ORDERLY, adj. [from order.]

1. Methodical; regular.

The book requireth but orderly reading. Hooker.

Then to their dams
Lest in their young; and wondrous orderly,
With manly haste, dispatch his housewifery. Chapman.

3. Not tumultuous; well regulated.

Balfour, by an orderly and well-governed march.

And in the king's quarters, without any confusion
he took his place of safety. Clarendon.

4. According with established method.
As for the orders established, with the law of nature, of God and man, do all favour that which is in being, till orderly judgment of decision be given against it, it is but justice to exact obedience of you. Hooker.

A clergy reformed from popery in such a manner, as happily to preserve the mean between the two extremes, in doctrine, worship, and government, perfected this reformation by quiet and orderly methods, free from those confusions and tumults that elsewhere attended it. Atterbury.

ORDERLY. adv. [from order.] Methodically; according to order; regularly;
according to rule.

All parts of knowledge have been thought by wise men to be thus most orderly delivered and proceeded in, when they are drawn to their first original. Hooker.

Ask him his name, and orderly proceed
To swear him. Shakespeare's Richard III.

Make it orderly and well,
According to the fashion of the time. Shakespeare.

It is walled with brick and stone, intermixed orderly. Sundays.

How should those active particles, justified by the occurrence of other bodies, whereof there is an infinite store, to orderly keep their cells without any alteration of site? Glanville.

In the body, when the principal parts, the heart and liver, do their offices, and all the inferior smaller vessels act orderly and duly, there arises a sweet enjoyment upon the whole, which we call health. South's Sermons.

ORDINABLE. adj. [ordino. Lat.] Such as may be appointed.

All the ways of economy God hath used toward a rational creature, to reduce mankind to that course of living which is most perfectly agreeable to our nature, and by the mercy of God ordainable to eternal bliss. Hammond.

ORDINAL. adj. [ordinal, Fr. ordinalis,
Lat.] Noting order: us, second, third.

The moon's age is thus found, add to the epoch the day of the month and the ordinal number of that month from March inclusive, because the epoch begins at March, and the sum of those, calling away thirty or twenty-nine, as often as it ariseth, is the age of the moon. Holler.

ORDINAL. n.f. [ordinal, Fr. ordinalis, Lat.]
A ritual; a book containing orders.

ORDINANCE. n.f. [ordonnance, Fr.]

1. Law; rule; precept.
It seemeth hard to plant any found ordinance, or reduce them to a civil government; since all their ill customs are permitted unto them. Spenser.

Let Richard and Elizabeth,
The true successors of each royal house,
By God's fair ordinance conjoin together! Shaksp.

2. Observance commanded.
One ordinance ought not to exclude the other, much less to disparage the other, and least of all to undermine that which is the most eminent. Taylor.

3. Appointment.
Things created to shew bare heads,
When one but of my ordinance stood up,
To speak of peace or war. Shakespeare.

4. A cannon. It is now generally written for distinction ordnance; its derivation is not certain; perhaps when the word can- non was first introduced, it was mistaken for canon, and so not improperly translated ordnance. It is commonly used in a collective sense for more cannons than one.

Caves and womb's vaultages of France,
Shall chide your trespass and return your mock,
In second accent to his ordinance. Shakespeare.

ORDINARILY. adv. [from ordinary.]

1. According to established rules; according to settled method.
We are not to look that the church should change her public and ordinariness, made according to that which is judged ordinary, and commonly fitted for the whole, although it chance that for some particular men the same be found inconvenient. Hooker.

Springs and rivers do not derive the water which they ordinarily refund, from rain. Woodward.

2. Commonly; usually.
The instances of human ignorance were not only clear ones, but such as are not so ordinarily fulfilled. Glanville.

Prayer ought to be more than ordinarily fervent and vigorous before the sacrament. South.

ORDINARY. adj. [ordinarius, Latin.]

1. Established; methodical; regular.
Though in arbitrary governments there may be a body of laws observed in the ordinary forms of justice, they are not sufficient to secure any rights to the people; because they may be dispensed with. Addison's Freeholder.

The standing ordinary means of conviction failing to influence them, it is not to be expected that any extraordinary means should be able to do it. Letter.

Through the want of a sincere intention of pleasing God in all our actions, we fall into such irregularities of life, as by the ordinary means of grace
we should have power to avoid. Lea.

2. Common; usual.
Yet did the only utter her doubt to her daughters, thinking, since the world was past, she would attend a further occasion, lest over much haste might seem to proceed of the ordinary milks between filters in law. Sidney.

It is sufficient that Moses have the ordinary credit of an historian given him. Tillotson.

This designation of the person our author is more than ordinary obliged to take care of, because he hath made the conveyance, as well as the power itself, sacred. Locke.

There is nothing more ordinary than children's receiving into their minds propositions from their parents; which being fastened by degrees, are at last, whether true or false, riveted there. Locke.

Method is not less requisite in ordinary conversation, than in writing. Addison.

3. Mean; of low rank.
These are the paths wherein ye have walked, that are of the ordinary sort of men; these are the very steps ye have trodden, and the manifest degrees whereby ye are of your guides and directors trained up in that school. Hooker.

Men of common capacity, and but ordinary judgment, are not able to discern what things are fittest for each kind and state of regiment. Hooker.

Every ordinary reader, upon the publishing of a new poem, has will and ability enough to turn several passages of it into ridicule, and very often in the right place. Addison.

My speculations, when sold single, are delights for the rich and wealthy; after some time they come to the market in great quantities, and are every ordinary man's money. Addison.

You will wonder how such an ordinary fellow as Wood could get his majesty's broad seal. Swift.

4. Ugly; not, handsome; as, she is an ordinary woman.

ORDINARY. n.f.

1. Established judge of ecclesiastical causes.
The evil will
Of all their parishioners they had constrain'd,
Who to the ordinary of them complain'd. Hab. Tale.

If fault be in these things any where justly found, law hath referred the whole disposition and redress thereof to the ordinary of the place. Hooker.

2. Settled establishment.
Spain had no other wars save those which were grown into an ordinary; now they have coupled therewith the extraordinary of the Valtoline and Palatinate. Bacon.

3. Actual and constant office.
Villiers had an intimation of the king's pleasure to be his cup-bearer at large; and the saunter following he was admitted extraordinary. Wotton.

He was last accepted, and was soon after made chaplain in ordinary to his majesty. Field.

cerdotal power.

Though ordained by Arian bishops, his ordination was never questioned. Stillinger.

St. Paul looks upon Titus as advanced to the dignity of a primo ruler of the church, and entrusted with a large diocese under the immediate government of their respective elders; and those deriving authority from his ordination. South.

ORDNANCE. n.f. [This was anciently written more frequently ordnance; but ordnance is used for distinction.] Cannon; great guns.

Have I not heard great ordnance in the field?
And heav'n's artillery thunder in the sky? Shaksp.

When a ship heels or rolls in foul weather, the breaking loose of ordnance is a thing very dangerous. Haleigh.

There are examples of wounded persons that have roured for anguish and torment at the discharge of ordnance, though at a very great distance. Bentley.

ORDONNANCE. n.f. [French.] Disposition of figures in a picture.

ORDURE. n.f. [ordure, Fr. from ordus,
Lat. Skinner.] Dung; filth.

Gard'ners with ordure hide those roots
That shall first spring and be most delicate. Shaksp.

Working upon human ordure, and by long acquaintance rendering it odiferous, he rears it sibetta occidentalis. Thoren.

We added fat pollutions of our own,
To increase the streaming ordures of the stage. Dryd.

Renew'd by ordure's sympathetic force,
As oil'd with magick juices for the course,
Vig'rous he rises. Pope.

ORE. n.f. [ore, or opa, Sax. oor, Dutch, a mine.]

1. Metal unrefined; metal yet in its solid state.

Round about him lay on every side,
Great heaps of gold that never would be spent;
Of which some were rude ore not purify'd
Of Muleiber's devouring element. Spenser.

They would have brought them the gold ore aboard their ships. Raleigh.

A hill not far,
Shone with a glossy lout, unlighted sign
That in his womb was hid metallic ore,
The work of sulphur. Milton.

Who have labour'd made
To search the treasures of the Roman mines?
Or dig in Grecian mines for purer ore? Hayward.

Quick-silver ore, of this mine is the richest of all ores I have yet seen, for ordinarily it contains in it half quick-silver, and in two parts of ore only one of quick-silver, and sometimes in three parts two parts of quick-silver. Boyle.

We walk in dreams on sunny land,
Where golden ore lies next with silver sand. Dryden.

Those who snipe veins in mines explore,
On the rich bed again the warm turf lay,
Till time dissects the yet imperfect ore,
And know it will be gold another day. Dryden.
Those profounder regions they explore,
Where metals ripen in vast cakes of ore. Garth.
2. Metal.

The liquid ore he drain'd, Felt his own tools; then what might else be wrought,
Futile, or grav'n in metal. Milton.

ORGAN. n. f. [organe, Fr. ὄργανον]

1. Natural instrument; as the tongue is the organ of speech, the lungs of respiration.

When he shall hear she died upon his words,
The ever lovely organ of her life
Shall come apparell'd in more precious habit,
Than when the liv'd indeed. Shakespeare.

For a mean and organ, by which this operative virtue might be continued, God appointed the light to be united, and gave it also motion and heat. Raleigh.

The aptness of birds is not so much in the conformity of the organs of speech, as in their attention. Bacon.

Wit and will
Can judge and chafe, without the body's aid;
Tho' on such objects they are working still.

As thro' the body's organs are convey'd. Danvers.

2. An instrument of music consisting of pipes filled with wind, and of tops touched by the hand. [Orgue, Fr.]

A hand of a vast extension, and a prodigious number of fingers playing upon all the organ pipes in the world, and making ever one found a particular note. Kent.

An organist teaches that office in a public choir.
Boyle.

ORGANIZATION. n. f. [from organize].
Construction in which the parts are to be disposed as to be subservient to each other.

Every man's senses differ as much from others in their figure, colour, site, and infinite other peculiarities in the organization, as any one man's can from itself, through divers accidental variations. Glanville.

That being then one plant, which has such an or- ganization of parts in one coherent body, partaking of one common life, it continues to be the same plant, though that life be communicated to new particles of matter, in a like continued organiza- tion. Locke.

To ORGANIZE. v. a. [organiser, Fr. from organ]. To construct to as that one part co-operates with another; to form or- ganically.

As the soul doth organize the body, and give unto every member that substance, quantity, and shape, which nature seemeth most expedient, so the inward grace of sacraments may teach what serveth best for their outward form. Hooker.

A genial and cherishing heat so acts upon the fit and obsequious matter wherein it was harboured, as to organize and fashion that disposed matter according to the exigencies of its own nature. Boyle.

Those nobler faculties in the mind, matter or- ganized, could never produce. Ray.

The identity of the same man consists in a participation of the same continued life by constantly floeting particles in succession vitally united to the same organized body. Locke.

ORGANOLOFT, n. f. [organ and loft]. The loft where the organs stand.

Five young ladies of no small fame for their great severity of manners, would go no where with their lovers but to an organloft in a church, where they had a cold treat and some few opera songs. Tatler.

2. Fountain; source; that which gives beginning or existence.
Nature, which consensu its origin, Cannot be border'd certain in itself. Shakespeare.

If any station upon earth be honourable, their's was; and their posterity therefore have no reason to blush at the memory of such an original. Atterb.
Some philosophers have placed the original of power in adulation, either of surpassing form, great valour, or superior understanding. Davenant.

Original of beings! pow'r divine! Since that I live and that I think, is thine. Prior.

These great oris, Primitive founts, and origins of light. Prior.

3. First copy; archetype; that from which any thing is transcribed or translated. In this sense origin is not used.
Compare this translation with the original, the three first stanzas are rendered almost word for word, not only with the same elegance, but with the same turn of expression. Addison.

External material things, as the objects of sensation; and the operations of our minds within, as the objects of reflection; are the only originals from whence all our ideas take their beginnings. Locke.

4. Derivation; descent.
They, like the food from which they sprang, accur'd,
Against the gods immortal hatred nurt;
An impious, arrogant, and cruel brood,
Expreſſing their original from blood. Dryden.

ORIGINAL. adj. [original, Fr. originalis, Lat.] Primitive; pristine; first.

The original question was, whether God hath forbidden the giving any worship to himself by an image? Stillingfleet.

Had Adam obeyed God, his original perfection, the knowledge and ability God at first gave him, would still have continued. Wake.

You still, fair mother, in your offspring trace
The flock of beauty defin'd for the race;
Kind nature forming them, the pattern took,
From heav'n's first work, and Eve's original look. Prior.

ORIGINALLY. adv. [from original.]

1. Primarily; with regard to the first cause; from the beginning.
A very great difference between a king that holdeth his crown by a willing act of estates, and one that holdeth it originally by the law of nature and descent of blood. Bacon.

As God is originally holy in himself, so he might communicate his sanctity to the sons of men, whom he intended to bring into the fruition of himself. Parson.

A present blessing upon our sabbath, is neither originally due from God's justice, nor becomes due to us from his generosity. Smallbridge.

2. At first.
The metallic and mineral matter, found in the perpendicular intervals of the strata, was originally, and at the time of the deluge, lodged in the bedrock of those strata. Woodward.

ORIGINATION. s. f. [originatio, Latin; from originate.]

1. The act or mode of bringing into existence; first production.
The tradition of the originatio of mankind seems to be universal; but the particular methods of that originatio excoſagated by the heathen, were particular. Hale.

This error is propagated by animal parents, to wit, butterflies, after the common originatio of all caterpillars. Ray.

Descartes first introduced the fancy of making a world, and deducing the originatio of the universe from mechanical principles. Keil.

2. Descent from a primitive.
The Greek word used by the apostles to express the church, signifieth, a calling forth, if we look upon the originatio. Peirson.

ORISON. s. f. [oraison, Fr. This word is variously accented; Shakespeare has the accent both on the first and second syllables; Milton and Craſhaw on the first, others on the second.] A prayer; a supplication.

Nymph, in thy orisons
Be all my sins remember'd. Hamlet.

Alas! your too much love and care of me
Are heavy orisons 'gainst this poor wretch. Shak.

He went into St. Paul's church, where he had orisons and to Deum sung. Bacon.

My wakeful lay shall knock
At th' oriental gates, and duly mock
The early larks shrill orisons, to be An anthem at the day's nativity. Craſhaw.

His daily orisons attract our ears. Sandys.

Lowly they bow'd, adoring, and began Their orisons, each morning duly paid. Milton.

So went he on with his orisons,
Which, if you mark them well, were wise ones. Cotton.

Here at dawn of night
The hermit oft, mid his orisons, hears Agluſt the voice of time diſparting tow'rs. Dyer.

1. Embellishment; decoration.
So may the outward shows be least themselves;
The world is still deceiv'd with ornament. Shaksp.

2. Something that embellishes.
Iris, wrought in ornaments to deck the cheeks of hosts. Chapman.

The Tuscan chief to me has feut
Their crown, and every regal ornament. Dryden.

No circumstances of life can place a man so far below the notice of the world, but that his virtues or vices will render him, in some degree, an ornament or disgrace to his profession. Beggs.

3. Honour; that which confers dignity.
They are abused and injured, and betrayed from their only perfection, whenever they are taught, that any thing is an ornament in them, that is not an ornament in the wisest amongst mankind. Low.

The persons of different qualities in both sexes, are indeed allowed their different ornaments; but these are by no means costly, being rather designed as marks of distinction than to make a figure. Add.

ORNAMENTAL. adj. [from ornament.] Serving to decoration; giving embellishment.

Some think it most accidental to wear the bedeckedness their write, others about their mark.

If the kind be capable of these properties, though rather in the ornament of nature, than the essential, what rules of morality can they have? I broken, in naming the doctrine, they are hereafter be amended? Dryde.

Even the heathens have esteemed this variety not only ornamental to the earth, but a proof of the wisdom of the Creator. Wanduer.

If no advancement or knowledge can be had from universities, the time there spent is lost every ornamental part of education is better taught elsewhere. Swi.

ORNAMENTALLY. adv. [from ornament.]
In such a manner as may confer embellishment.

ORNAMENTED. adj. [from ornament.]
Embellished; bedecked. This is, I think, a word of late introduction, not very elegant.

ORNATE. adj. [ornatus, Lat.] Bedecked -decorated; fine.

ORPHAN. s. f. [ὄρφανος; orphanos, Fr.]
A child who has lost father or mother; or both.

Poor orphan in the wide world scattered,
As budding branch rent from the native tree,
And thrown forth until he be withered;
Such is the state of man. Spenser.

Who can be bound by any solemn vow
To leave the orphan of his patrimony,
To wring the widow from her custom'd right,
And have no other reason for his wrong,
But that he was bound by a solemn oath? Shaksp.

Sad widows, by thee riled, weep in vain,
And ruin'd orphans of thy tapes complain. Sandys.

The fox with spoils his angry bullets strow,
Widows and orphans making us they go. Waller.

Pity, with a parent's mind,
This helpless orphan whom thou leav'st behind. Dryden.

Collections were made for the relief of the poor, whether widows or orphans. Nelson.

ORPHAN. adj. [orphelin, Fr.] Bereft of parents.

This king, left orphan both of father and mother, found his estate, when he came to age, so disjunct even in the noblest and strongest limbs of government, that the name of a king was grown odious. Sidney.

O'RRIIS. n. f. [oris, Latin.] A plant and flower. Miller.

The nature of the orris root is almost singular; for roots that are in any degree sweet, it is but the same sweetness with the wood or leaf; but the orris is not sweet in the leaf; neither is the flower any thing so sweet as the root. Bacon.

O'RRIIS. n. f. [old French.] A sort of gold or silver lace.

ORTS. n. f. seldom with a singular. [This word is derived by Skinner from ort, German, the fourth part of any thing; by Lye more reasonably from orda, Irish, a fragment. In Anglo-Saxon, ord signifies the beginning; whence in some provinces odds and cuds, for ords and cnds, signify remnants, scattered pieces, refuse; from ord thus used probably came ort.] Refuse; things left or thrown away. Obsolete.

He must be taught, and train'd, and bid go forth;
A barren-spirited fellow, one that feeds
On subject orts and imitations. Shakespeare.

The factions of her faith, orts of her love,
The fragments, scraps, the bits, and greasy reliques
Of her o'er-eaten faith, are bound to Diomedes. Shakespeare.

Much good do't you then;
Brave plush and velvet men
Can feed on orts, and safe in your stage-cloths, Dare quit, upon your oaths,
The flangers, and the stage-wrights too. Ben Jonson.

ORTHODOX. } adj. [ὀρθός, and δόξω;
ORTHODOXAL. } orthodox, French;
Sound in opinion and doctrine; not heretical. Orthodoxal is not used.

Be you persuaded and settled in the true protestant religion professed by the church of England, which is as found and orthodox in the doctrine thereof, as any christian church in the world. Bacon.

An uniform profession of one and the same orthodoxal verity, which was once given to the saints in the holy apostles days. White.

External bliss is not immediately superfructed on the most orthodox beliefs; but as our Saviour faith, If ye know these things, happy are ye if you do them; the doing must be first superfructed on the knowing or believing, before any happiness can be built on it. Hammond.

Origen and the two Clemens's, their works were originally orthodox, but had been afterwards corrupted, and interpolated by heretics in some parts of them. Waterland.

ORTHODOXY. adv. [from orthodox.] With soundness of opinion.

The doctrine of the church of England, expressed in the thirty-nine articles, is orthodoxly and so orthodoxly settled, as cannot be questioned without extreme danger to the honour of the religion. Bacon.

ORTHODOXY. n. f. [ὀρθόδοξία; orthodovic, Fr. from orthodox.] Soundness in opinion and doctrine.

Basil himself bears full and clear testimony to Gregory's orthodoxy. Waterland.

I do not attempt explaining the mysteries of the christian religion; since Providence has made them should be mysteries, it cannot be agreeable to equity, orthodoxy, or good sense, to go about it. Swift.

ORTHODROMICKS. n. f. [from ὀρθός and δρόμος.] The art of sailing in the arc of some great circle, which is the shortest or straightest distance between any two points on the surface of the globe. Harris.

ORTHOGRAPHER. n. f. [ὀρθός, and γράφω.] One who spells according to the rules of grammar.

He was wont to speak plain, like an honest man and a soldier; and now he is turn'd orthographer, his words are just so many strange disses. Shakspeare.

ORTHOGRAPHICAL. adj. [from orthography.]
1. Rightly spelled.

2. Relating to the spelling.
I received from him the following letter, which after having rectified some little orthographical mistakes, I shall make a present of to the public. Spectator.

3. Delineated according to the elevation, not the ground-plot.

In the orthographical schemes there should be a true delineation and the just dimensions of each face, and of what belongs to it. Mortimer.

ORTHOGRAPHICALLY. adj. [from orthographical.]

1. According to the rules of spelling.
2. According to the elevation.

ORTHOGRAPHY. n. f. [ὀρθός and γράφω; orthographie, French.]

1. The part of grammar which teaches how words should be spelled.

This would render languages much more easy to be learned, as to reading and pronouncing, and especially as to the writing them, which now as they stand we find to be troublesome, and it is no small part of grammar which treats of orthography and right pronunciation. Holder.

2. The art or practice of spelling.

In London they clip their words after one manner about the court, another in the city, and a third in the suburbs; all which reduced to writing, would entirely confound orthography. Swift.

3. The elevation of a building delineated.
You have the orthography or upright of this ground-plot, and the explanation with a scale of feet and inches. Moxon.

ORTHO'PNOEA. n. f. [ὀρθόπνοια; orthopneic, Fr.] A disorder of the lungs, in which respiration can be performed only in an upright posture.

His disease was an asthma oft turning to an orthopneic; the cause a transudation of tartarous humours from his joints to his lungs. Harvey.

OSCIT'ANCY. n. f. [oscitantia, Latin.]

1. The act of yawning.
2. Unusual sleepiness; carelessness.

If persons of circumspect piety have been overtaken, what security can there be for our wretched oscitancy? Government of the Tongue.

It might proceed from the oscitancy of transcribers, who, to dispatch their work the sooner, used to write all numbers in cyphers. Spectator.

OSCITANT. adj. [oscitans, Latin.]

1. Yawning; unusually sleepy.
2. Sleepy; sluggish.

Our oscitant lazy piety gave vacancy for them, and they will now lend none back again. Decay of Piety.

OSCITA'TION. n. f. [oscito, Lat.] The act of yawning.

I shall defer considering this subject till I come to my treatise of oscitation, laughter, and ridicule. Tatler.

O'SIER. n. f. [osier, Fr. vitis, Lat.] A tree of the willow kind, growing by the water, of which the twigs are used for basket-work.

The rank of osiers, by the murmuring stream,
Left on your right hand, brings you to the place. Shakespeare.

Ere the sun advance his burning eye,
I must fill up this osier cage of ours
With bawful weeds and precious juiced flowers. Shakespeare.

Our comes crown'd with osier, fags, and weeds. Drayton.

Bring them for food sweet boughs and osiers cut,
Nor all the winter long thy hay-rick shut. May.
Like her no nymph can willing osiers bend,
In basket-works, which painted streaks commend. Dryden.

Along the marshes spread,
We make the osier fringed bank our bed. Pope.

O'SMUND. n. f. A plant: It is sometimes used in medicine. It grows upon bogs in divers parts of England. Miller.

O'SPRAY. n. f. [corrupted from osifraga, Lat.] The sea eagle, of which it is reported, that when he hovers in the air, all the fish in the water turn up their bellies, and lie still for him to seize which he pleases. Hanmer.

I think he'll be to Rome,
As is the ospray to the fish, who takes it
By sovereignty of nature. Shakespeare.

Among the fowls shall not be eaten, the eagle, the osifraga, and the ospray. Numbers.

O'SSELET. n. f. [French.] A little hard substance arising on the inside of a horse's knee, among the small bones; it grows out of a gummy substance which fastens those bones together. Farrier's Dict.

O'SSICLE. n. f. [ossiculum, Latin.] A small bone.

There are three very little bones in the ear, upon whose right constitution depends the due motion of the tympanum; and if the action of one little muscle, which serves to draw one of these ossicles, fix to the Symptoms, which are shared, the tension of that membrane coming, sound is hindered from reaching into the ear.

OSTRICK. adj. [ossa and facio, Lat.] Having the power of making bones, or changing caraneous or membranous to bony substance.

If the caries be superficial, and the bone firm, you may by medicaments consume the moisture in the caries, dry the bone, and dispose it, by virtue of its ostrick faculty, to thrust out callus, and make separation of its caries.

OSTIFICATION. n. f. [from ostify.] Change of caraneous, membranous, or cartilaginous, into bony substance.

Ostifications or indurations of the artery, appear so continually in the beginnings of aneurisus, that it is not easy to judge whether they are the cause or the effect of them.

OSTIFRAGE. n. f. [ostifraga, Lat. ostifragus, Fr.] A kind of eagle, whose flesh is forbid under the name of gryphon. The ostifraga or ospray, is thus called, because it breaks the bones of animals in order to come at the marrow. It is said to dig up bodies in church-yards, and eat what it finds in the bones, which has been the occasion that the Latins call it avis bustaria. See OSPRAY.

TO OSSIFY. v. a. [ossa and facio.] To change to bone.

The dilated artery every where in the neighbourhood of the cyst is generally ossified.

OSTIVOROUS. adj. [ossa and toro.] Devouring bones.

The bone of the gullet is not in all creatures alike answerable to the body or stomach: as in the fox, which feeds on bones, and swallows whole, or with little chewing; and next in a dog and other ostivorous quadrupeds, it is very large.

OSSUARY. n. f. [ossuarium, Lat.] A charnel-house; a place where the bones of dead people are kept.

OST. n. f. A vessel upon which hops or malt are dried.

OSTENSIBLE. adj. [ostendo, Lat.] Such as is proper or intended to be shown.

2. Show; token. These senses are peculiar to Shakespeare.

Be merry, and employ your chiefest thoughts To courtship, and such fair ostent of love As shall conveniently become you there.

3. A portent; a prodigy; any thing ominous.

To kisse our zeales up, that admir'd, whereof a fact so cleane

Of all ill as our sacrifice, so fearful an ostent Should be the issue.

Latinius, frighted with his dire ostent, For counsel to his father Faunus went; And sought the shades renown'd for prophecy, Which near Albun's sulph'rous fountain lie.

OSTENTATION. n. f. [ostentation, French; ostentatio, Latin.]

1. Outward show; appearance.

If these shows be not outward, which of you But is four Volscians?

—March on my fellows; Make good this ostentation, and you shall Divide in all with us.

You are come A market-maid to Rome, and have prevented The ostentation of our love.

s. ostentation display; boast; vain show. This is the usual sense.

If all these secret springs of detraction fail, yet a vain ostentation of wit sets a man on attacking an established name, and sacrificing it to the mirth and laughter of those about him.

He knew that good and bountiful minds were sometimes inclined to ostentation, and ready to cover it with pretence of inciting others by their example, and therefore checks this vanity: Take heed, says he, that you do not your aims before men, to be seen.

With all her lustre, now, her lover warns: Then out of ostentation, hides her charms.

The great end of the art is to strike the imagination. The painter is therefore to make an ostentation of the means by which this is done; the spectator is only to feel the result in his bosom.

3. A show; a spectacle. Not in use.

The king would have me present the princeps with some delightful ostentation, show, pageant, antic, or firework.

OSTENTATIOUS. adj. [ostento, Latin.]

Boastful; vain; fond of show; fond to expose to view.

Your modesty is so far from being ostentatious of the good you do, that it blushes even to have it known; and therefore I must leave you to the satisfaction of your own conscience, which, though a silent panegyric, is yet the best.

They let Ulysses into his disposition, and he seems to be ignorant, credulous, and ostentatious.

OSTENTATIOUSLY. adv. [from ostentatious.] Vainly; boastfully.

OSTENTATIOUSNESS. n. f. [from ostentatious.] Vanity; boastfulness.

OSTRACISM. n. f. [ὀστρακισμός; ostracisme, Fr.] A manner of pulling sentence, in which the note of acquittal or condemnation was marked upon a shell which the voter threw into a vessel. Banishment; public censure.

Virtue in courtiers hearts Suffers an ostracism, and departs; Profit, ease, smiles, plenty, bid it go, But whither, only knowing you, I know.

Public envy is an ostracism, that eclipseth men when they grow too great; and therefore it is a bridle to keep them within bounds.

Ostracism by sending out of doors. The ostracism, and that's out of doors. Chapman.

This man, upon a slight and selfish accusation of favouring arbitrary power, was banished by ostracism; which in English would signify, that they voted he should be removed from their presence and council for ever.

OSTRACITES. n. f. Ostracites expresses the common oyster in its fossil state.

OSTRICH. n. f. [ostruche, French; Aruthio, Latin.] Ostrich is ranged among birds.

It is very large, its wings very short, and the neck about four or five spans. The feathers of its wings are in great esteem, and are used as an ornament for hats, beds, canopies: they are stained of several colours, and made into pretty tufts. They are hunted by way of course, for they never fly; but use their wings to assist them in running more swiftly. The ostrich swallows bits of iron or brass, in the same manner as other birds will swallow small stones or gravel, to assist in digesting or comminuting their food. It lays its eggs upon the ground, hides them under the sand, and the sun hatches them.

I'll make thee eat iron like an ostrich, and swallow my sword like a great pin, ere thou and I part.

Gavest thou the goodly wings unto the peacock? or wings and feathers unto the ostrich?

The Scots knights errant fight, and fight to cut, Their ostrich stomachs make their swords their meat.

Modern ostriches are dwindled to meer larks, in comparison with those of the ancients.

OTACOUS'TICK. n. f. [ὠτή and αὐτίκ; otacous'tique, Fr.] An instrument to facilitate hearing.

In a hare, which is very quick of hearing, it is supplied with a bony tube; which, as a natural otacous'tick, is so directed backward, as to receive the smallest and most distant sound that comes behind her.

OTHER. pron. [oðer, Sax. autre, Fr.]

1. Not the same; not this; different. In this sense it seems an adjective, yet in the plural, when the substantive is suppressed, it has, contrarily to the nature of adjectives, a plural termination; as, of last week three days were fair, the others rainy.

Of good actions some are better than other times.

Will it not be receiv'd That they have don't?

—Who dares receive it other? The distressed matrons and maidens, some in their houses, other some in the churches, with floods of tears and lamentable cries, poured forth their prayers to the Almighty, craving his help in that their hard distress.

He that will not give just occasion to think, that all government in the world is the product only of force and violence, and that men live together by no other rules but that of beasts, where the strongest carries; and so lay a foundation for perpetual disorder and mischief, tumult, sedition, and rebellion; things that the followers of that hypothesis so loudly cry out against, must of necessity find out another state of government.

No leaves shall ever be made other than scales for years not exceeding thirty odd, in collection, and not in reason or remainder.

2. Not I, or he, but some one else. In this sense it is a substantive, and has a genitive and plural.

Were I king, I should cut off the nobles for their lands; Desire his jewels and this other's house.

Physicians are some of them so conformable to the will of the patient, as they press not the cure of the disease; and some others are so regular in proceeding according to art, as they respect not the condition of the patient.

The confidant arises, when the one will put their fickle into the other's hands.

Never allow yourselves to be idle, whilst others are in want of any thing that your hands can make for them.

The king had all be crav'd, or could compel, And all was done—let others judge how well.

3. Not the one, not this, but the contrary.

There is that controlling worth in goodness, that the will cannot but like and desire it; and on the other side, that odious deformity in vice, that it never offers itself to the affection of mankind, but under the disguise of the other.

2. Correlative to each.

In lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves.

Scotland and thou did each in other live, Nor would'st thou her, nor could she thee survive.

5. Something besides.

The learning of Latin being nothing but the learning of words, join as much other real knowledge with it as you can.

6. The next.

Thy air, Thou other gold-bound brow, is like the first; A third is like the former.

7. The third part.

Dund my hair up; as 'twas yesterday? No, nor the other day.

8. It is sometimes put elliptically for other thing; something different.

I can expect no other from those that judge by single sights and rash measures, than to be thought fond or insolent.

OTHERGATES. adv. [other and gate, for way.] In another manner.

If I had been in drink, he would have tickled you othergates than he did.

OTHERGUISE. adv. [other and guise. This is often pronounced and sometimes written otherguise.] Of another kind.

In other places.

OTHERWHERE. adv. [other and where.] In other places.

As Jews they had access to the temple and synagogues, but as Christians they were of necessity forced otherwhere to assemble themselves.

OTHERWHILE. adv. [other and while.] At other times.

At other times.

OTHERWISE. adv. [other and wise.]

They only plead, that whatsoever God revealeth as necessary for all christian men to do and believe, the same we ought to embrace, whether we have received it by writing or otherwise, which no man denieth.

1. In a different manner.

The whole church hath not tied the parts unto one and the same thing, they being therein left each to their own choice, may either do as others do, or else otherwise, without any breach of duty at all.

2. By other causes.

Mr John Norris failed in the attempts of Lisbon, and returned with the loss, by sickness and other-ways, of eight thousand men.

3. In other respects.

It is said truly, that the best men otherwise, are not always the best in regard of society.

Men seldom consider God any other way in relation to themselves, and therefore seek some extraordinary benefit to excite their attention, and engage their love.

OTTER. n. f. [otter, Sax. lutra, Lat.] An amphibious animal that preys upon fish.

The toes of the otter's hinder feet, for the better swimming, are joined together with a membrane, as in the bevir; from which he differs principally in his teeth, which are canin; and in his tail, which is scaly, or a long taper: so that he may not be unjustly called pusillus aquaticus, or the water polecat. He makes himself burrows on the water-side, as a bevir; is sometimes tamed, and taught by nimble surrounding the fishes, to drive them into the net.

At the lower end of the hall is a large otter's skin stuffed with hay.

Would ye preserve a numerous happy race? Let your fierce dogs the ravenous otter chase; Th' amphibious monster ranges all the shores, Darts thro' the waves, and ev'ry haunt explores.

OVAL. adj. [ovale, Fr. ovum, Lat. an egg.]

Oblong; resembling the longitudinal section of an egg.

The mouth is low and narrow, but, after having entered pretty far in the grotto, opens itself on both sides in an oval figure of an hundred yards.

Mercurius, nearest to the central sun, Does on an oval orbit, circling run; But rarely is the object of our sight, In solar glory sunk.

OVAL. n. f. [from ovum, Lat.]

A triangle is that which has three angles, or an oval is that which has the shape of an egg.

OVARIOUS. adj. [from ovum, Lat.] Consisting of eggs.

He to the rocks Dire clinging gathers his ovarious food.

Ovary. n. f. [ovaire, Fr. ovarium, Lat.]

The part of the body in which impregnation is performed.

The ovary or part where the white involveth it, is in the second region of the matrix, which is somewhat long and inverted.

Ovation. n. f. [ovation, Fr. oratio, Lat.]

A lesser triumph among the Romans allowed to those commanders who had won a victory without much bloodshed, or defeated some less formidable enemy.

OUBAT. } n. f. [eruca pilosa, Lat.] A sort of caterpillar; an insect.

Ouch. n. f. An ornament of gold or jewels.

Ouches or spangs, as they are of no great cost, so they are of most glory.

Ouch of a boar. The blow given by a boar's tusk.

OVEN. n. f. [open, Sax.] An arched cavity heated with fire to bake bread.

He loudly bray'd, that like was never heard, And from his wide devouring oven sent A duke of fire, that flaming in his beard.

Here's yet in the world hereafter, the kneading, the making of the cake, the heat of the oven, and the baking.

Bats have been found in ovens and other hollow close places, matted one upon another; and therefore it is likely that they sleep in the winter, and eat nothing.

OVEN hath a double signification in the names of places, according to the different situation of them. If the place be upon or near a river, it comes from the Saxon open, a brink or bank; but if there is in the neighbourhood another of the same name, distinguished by the addition of neith, then over is from the Gothic ofar, above. Gilpin's Camden.

OVER. prep. [ofar, Gothic; open, Sax.]

1. Above, with respect to excellence or dignity.

How happy some, o'er other some can be! Thro' Athens I am thought as fair as she.

Young Pallas shone conspicuous o'er the rest; Gilded his arms, embroider'd was his vest.

High, over all, was your great conduct shown, You fought our safety, but forgot your own.

The commentary which attends this poem, will have one advantage over most commentaries, that it is not made upon conjectures.

It will afford field enough for a divine to enlarge on, by shewing the advantages which the Christian world has over the Heathen.

2. Above, with regard to rule or authority: opposed to under.

The church has over her bishops, able to silence the factious, no less by their preaching than by their authority.

Captain, yourself are the fittest to live and reign not over, but next and immediately under the people.

3. Above in place: opposed to below.

He was more than over shoes in love. The street should see as the walks over head.

Thrice happy is that humble pair, Beneath the level of all cure, Over whose heads those arrows fly, Of sad distrust and jealousy.

4. Across; from side to side: as, he leaped over the brook.

Come o'er the brook Bessy to me, She dares not come over to thee.

Certain lakes and pits, such as that of Avenues, poison birds which fly over them.

The gentle fly o'er the barn, the bees in arms Drive headlong from their waxy cells in swarms.

5. Through; diffusively.

All the world over, those that received not the commands of Christ and his doctrines of purity and perseverance, were signally destroyed.

6. Upon.

Wise governors have as great a watch over fumes, as they have of the actions and delights.

Sung heav'nly anthems of his victory Over temptation and the tempter proud.

7. Before. This is only used in over night.

On their intended journey to proceed, And over night what to thereto did need.

8. It is in all senses written by contraction o'er.

O'ER. adv.

1. Above the top.

Give, and it shall be given unto you: good measure, pressed down and shaken together and running over, shall men give.

2. More than a quantity assigned.

Even here like with the laws of nature and reason be of necessity; yet somewhat over and besides them is necessary, namely human and positive law.

When they did mete it, he that gathered much had nothing over, and he that gathered little had no lack.

The ordinary soldiers having all their pay, and a month's pay over, were sent into their countries.

The eastern people determined their digit by the breadth of barley-corns, six making a digit, and twenty-four a hand's breadth: a small measure yet or under.

3. From side to side.

The fan of an Indian king made of the feathers of a peacock's tail, composed into a round form, bound altogether with a circular rim, above a foot over.

4. From one to another.

This golden vessel the humble deliverer of the Tirana, who delivereth it over to that son that he had chosen. Bacon.

5. From a country beyond the sea.

It hath a white berry, but is not brought over with the coral. Bacon.

They brought new customs and new vices o'er;
Taught us more arts than honest men require. Philips.

6. On the surface.

The first came out red all over, like an hairy garment. Genesis.

7. Past. This is rather the sense of an adjective.

Soliman, pausing upon the matting, the heat of his fury being somewhat over, suffered himself to be intreated. Knolles.

Meditate upon the effects of anger; and the best time to do this, is to look back upon anger when the fit is over. Bacon.

What the garden choicest bears

To sit and taste, till his meridian heat

Be over, and the sun more cool decline. Milton.

The act of stealing was soon over, and cannot be undone, and for it the sinner is only answerable to God or his viceregent. Taylor.

He will, as soon as his first surprize is over, begin to wonder how such a favour came to be believed on him. Atterbury.

There youths and nymphs in comfort gay,
Shall had the rising, close the parting day;
With me, alas! with me those joys are o'er,
For me the vernal garlands bloom no more. Pope.

8. Throughout; completely.

Have you read o'er the letters I sent you? Shaksp.
Let them argue over all the topics of divine goodness and human weakness, yet how trifling must be their plea! South.

9. With repetition; another time.

He o'er and o'er divides him,
'Twixt his unkindness and his kindness. Shaksp.
Sitting or standing full consist to roar,
In the same verse, the same rules o'er and o'er. Dryden.

Longing they look, and gazing at the sight,
Devour her o'er and o'er with vast delight. Dryden.
Thou, my Hector, art thyself alone,
My parents, brothers, and my lord in one:
O kill not all my kindred o'er again,
Nor tempt the dangers of the duty plain;
But in this tow'r, for our defence, remain. Dry.

When children forget, or do amaction awkwardly, make them do it over and over again, till they are perfect. Locke.

It this miracle of Christ's rising from the dead,
be not sufficient to convince a resolute libertian, neither would the rising of one from the dead be sufficient for that purpose; since it would only be the doing that over again which hath been done already. Atterbury.

The most learned will never find occasion to act over again what is falsed of Alexander the Great, that when he had conquered the eastern world, he wept for want of more worlds to conquer. Watts.
He cramm'd his pockets with the precious store,
And ev'ry night review'd it o'er and o'er. Harte.

10. Extraordinary; in a great degree.

The word symbol should not seem to be over difficult. Baker.

11. Over and above. Besides; beyond what was first supposed, or immediately intended.

Moses took the redemption money of them that were over and above. Numbers.
He gathered a great mass of treasure, and gained over and above the good will and esteem of all people wherover he came. LeStrange.

12. Over against. Opposite; regarding in front.

In Tadmora is a church with windows only from above. It reporteth the voice thirteen times, if you stand by the close end of the wall, over against the door. Bacon.

I sat his picture, and place myself over against it whole hours together. Spectator.

Over against this church stands a large hospital, erected by a shoemaker. Addison on Italy.

13. To give over. To cease from.

These when they praise, the world believes no more,
Then when they promise to give scribbling o'er. Pope.

14. To give over. To attempt to help no longer: as, his physicians have given him over; his friends who advised him, have given him over.

15. In composition it has a great variety of significations; it is arbitrarily prefixed to nouns, adjectives, or other parts of speech in a sense equivalent to more than enough; too much.

Devilish Macbeth
By many of these trains hath sought to win me
Into his pow'r: and modest wisdom plucks me
From over-credulous haste. Shakspere.

St. Hieron reporteth, that he saw a satyr; but the truth hereof I will not rashly impugn, or over-boldly affirm. Peacham.

These over-busy spirits, whose labour is their only reward, hunt a shadow and chase the wind.

Decay of Piety.
If the ferment of the breast be vigorous, an over-fermentation in the part produceth a phlegmon.

A gangrene doth arise in phlegmons, through the unfavourable application of over-cold medicements. Wifeman.

Poets, like lovers, should be bold and dare;
They spoil their business with an over-care:
And he who servilely creeps after sense,
Is fate, but ne'er will reach an excellence. Dryden.

Wretched man o'er-
His cramm'd desires, with more than nature needs. Dryden.

Bending o'er the cup, the tears she shed,
Seem'd by the posture to discharge her head,
O'er-pl'd before. Dryden.

As they are likely to over-floutish their own case, their flattery is hardly to be discovered: for who would imagine himself guilty of putting tricks upon himself? Collier.

He has afforded us only the twilight of probability;
suitable to that state of mediocrity he has placed us in here; wherem to check our over-confidence and presumption, we might, by every day's experience, be made sensible of our shortightedness. Locke.

This part of grammar has been much neglected, as some others over-diligently cultivated. It is easy for men to write one after another of cases and genders. Locke.

It is an ill way of establishing this truth, and silencing atheists, to take some men's having that idea of God in their minds, for the only proof of a deity: and out of an over-high of that darling invention, rather all other arguments. Locke.

A grown person fastening with honey, no sooner hears the name of it, but his fancy immediately carries sickness and qualms to his stomach. Had this happened to him by an over-dish of honey, when a child, all the same effects would have followed, but the cause would have been mistaken, and the anti-

Take care you over-tune not the turf: it is only to be burnt so as may make it break. Motimer.
Don't over-fatigue the spirit, lest the mind be seized with a stupidity, and thereby mutilate and grow tired of a particular subject. Watts.

The memory of the learner should not be too much crowded with a tumultuous heap of ideas; one idea encases another. An over-ready grasp does not retain the larger handful. Watts.

To OVERABOUND, v. n. [over and abound.]

To abound more than enough.

Both humble
Fitting congenial pace, to rich the foil.

So much does tractuous moisture o'er-abound. Phil.
The learned, never over-abounding in transitory
com, should not be discontented. Pope.

To OVERACT, v. a. [over and act.] To act more than enough.

You over-act when you don't understand:
A little call yourself again; and thank. Ben Jonson.

Princes courts may over-act then reverence, and make themselves laughed at for their too-loudness and extravagant relative worship. Stillington.

Good men often blench the reputation of their piety, by over-acting some things, as if they, by an indifferent seal about things wherein religion is not concerned. Titelm.

He over-acted his part; his passions, when once let loose, were too impetuous to be managed.

To OVERARCH, v. a. [over and arch.] To cover as with an arch.

Where high Ithaca o'erlocks the floods,
Brown with o'er-arching shades and pendant woods. Pope.

To OVERAWE, v. a. [over and awe.] To keep in awe by superior influence.

The king was present in person to overlook the magnitudes, and to over-awe these subjects with the terror of his sword. Spenser.

Her graceful innocence, her every air
Of gesture, or least action, o'er-aw'd
His malice. Milton.

I could be content to be your chief tormentor, ever paying you mock reverence, and founding in your ears the empty title which inspired you with presumption, and over-awed my daughter to comply. Addison's Guardian.

A thousand fears Still over-awe when she appears. Glanville.

To OVERBALANCE, v. a. To weigh down;
to preponderate.

Not doubting but by the weight of reason I should counterpoise the over-balancing of any factors. King Charles.

The hundred thousand pounds per annum, wherem we over-balance them in trade, must be paid us in money. Locke.

When these important considerations are set before a rational being, acknowledging the truth of every article, should a bare single possibility be of weight enough to over-balance them. Rogers.

OVERBALANCE, n. f. [over and balance.]
Something more than equivalent.

Our exported commodities would, by the manner, enlarge the treasure of this kingdom above what it can ever be by other means, than a mighty overbalance of our exported to our imported commodities. Temple.

The mind should be kept in a perfect indifference, not inclining to either side, any further than the overbalance of probability gives it the turn of assent and belief. Locke.

OVERBATTLE, adj. [Of this word I know not the derivation; batten is to grow fat, and to battle, is at Oxford to feed on trull.] Too fruitful; exuberant.

In the church of God sometimes it cometh to pass, as in over-battle grounds: the fertile disposition wherem is good, yet be cause it exceedeth due proportion, it bringeth abundantly, through too much rankness, things less profitable, whereby that which principally it should yield, either prevented in place or defrauded of nourishment. Hooker.

To OVERBEAR, v. a. [over and bear.] To repress; to subdue; to overwhelm; to bear down.

What more savage than man, if he see himself able by fraud to over-reach, or by power to over-bear the laws? Hooker.

My desire
All comment impudencies would o'er-bear,
That did oppose my will. Shakspere.

The ocean o'er-sweeping of his list,
Eat not the flats with more impetuous haste
Than young I nertes, in a riotous head, O'er-bears your officers. Shakspere.

Our counsel, it pleas'd your highness
To over-bear. Shakspere.

Gloster, thou shalt well perceive,
That nor in birth or for authority,
The bishop will be over-borne by thee. Shakspere.

He Turkish commander, with all their forces, assailed the city, thrusting their men into the treaches by heaps, as it they would, with very multitude, have discouraged or over-borne the christians. Knolles.

The point of reputation, when it was the cause of the battle lost, did over-bear the reason of war.

Bacon.

OVE

*Yet fortune, valour, all is over-born,
By numbers; as the long resisting bank
By the impetuous torrent.* Denham.

A body may as well be over-born by the violence of a shallow, rapid stream, as swallowed up in the gulf of smooth water. L'Estrange.

Crowding on this last the first impel,
Till over-born with weight the Cyprian fell. Dryd.
The judgment, if sway'd by the over-bearing of passion, and stor'd with lubricous opinions instead of clearly conceived truths, will be erroneous. Glanville's Scepsis.

Take care that the memory of the learner be not too much crowded with a tumultuous heap, or overbearing multitude of documents at one time. Watts.

The horror or loathsomeness of an object may over-bear the pleasure which results from its greatness, novelty, or beauty. Addison.

To OVERBID, v. a. [over and bid.] To offer more than equivalent.

You have over-bid all my past sufferings,
And all my future too. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

To OVERBLOW, v. n. [over and blow.]
To be put to violence.

Led with delight, they thus beguile the way,
Until the blustering storm is over-blown. Spenser.

All those tempests being over-blown, there long after arose a new storm which over-run all Spain. Spenser.

This ague fit of fear is over-blown,
An easy task it is to win our own. Shakspeare.

When storms are over-blown, Dryden.

To OVERBLOW, v. a. [over and blow.] To drive away as clouds before the wind.

Some angel that beholds her there,
Instruct us to record what the way here;
And when this cloud of sorrow's over-blown.

Thro' the wide world we'll make her graces known.
Waller.

OVERBOARD, adv. [over and board. See BOARD.] Off the ship; out of the ship.

The great assembly met again, and now he that was the cause of the tempest being thrown overboard, there were hopes a calm should ensue. Howell.

A merchant having a vessel richly fraught at sea in a storm, there is but one certain way to save it, which is, by throwing its rich lading over-board. South.

The trembling dotard to the deck he drew,
And hoisted up and over-board he threw;
This done, he seiz'd the helm. Dryden.

He obtained liberty to give them only one long before he leaped over-board, which he did, and then plunged into the sea. L'Estrange.

Though great ships were commonly bad sea-boats, they had a superior force in a sea engagement: the shock of them being sometimes so violent, that it would throw the crew on the upper deck of lesser ships over-board. Arbuthnot.

To OVERBULK, v. a. [over and bulk.] To oppress by bulk.

The feeding pride,
In rank Achilles, must or now be cropt,
Or shedding, breed a nursery of like evils,
To over-bulk us all. Shakspeare.

To OVERBURDEN, v. a. [over and burden.]
To load with too great weight.

If he were not cloyed with his company, and that he thought not the earth over-burthened with him, he would cool his fiery grief. Sidney.

To OVERBUY, v. a. [over and buy.] To buy too dear.

He, when want requires, is only wise,
Who fights not foreign aids, nor over-buys;
But on our native strength, in time of need, relies.
Dryden.

To OVERCARRY, v. a. [over and carry.]
To hurry too far; to be urged to any thing violent or dangerous.

He was the king's uncle, but yet of no capacity to succeed; by reason whereof his natural affection and duty was less easy to be overcarried by ambition. Hayward.

To OVERCAST, v. a. part. overcast. [over and cast.]

OVE

1. To cloud; to darken; to cover with gloom.

As they pass,
The day with clouds was sudden over-cast. Spenser.

The, Robin, over-cast the night;
The flarry welkin cover thou anon,
With drooping fogs, as black as Acheron. Shaksf.

Our days of age are sad and over-cast, in which we find that of all our vain passions and affections past, the sorrow only abideth. Raleigh.

Of fumes, and humid vapours made,
No cloud in to serene a mansion find,
To over-cast her ever-burning mind. Waller.

Those clouds that over-cast our morn shall fly, Dispell'd to farthest corners of the sky. Dryden.

The dawn is over-cast, the morning lours,
And heavily in clouds brings on the day. Addison.

2. To cover. This sense is hardly retained but by needle-women, who call that which is encircled with a thread, overcast.

When malice would work that which is evil, and in working avoid the suspicion of an evil intent, the colour wherewith it overcasteth itself is always a fair and plausible pretence of seeking to further that which is good. Hooker.

Their arms abroad with gray moss over-cast,
And their green leaves trembling with every blast.
Spenser.

3. To rate too high in computation.

The king, in his account of peace and calms, did much overcast his fortunes, which proved full of broken seas, tides, and tempests. Bacon.

To OVERCHARGE, v. a. [over and charge.]

1. To oppress; to cloy; to surcharge.

On air we feed in every infant, and on meats
but at times; and yet the heavy load of abundance, wherewith we oppress and over-charge nature,
maketh her to sink unawares in the mid-way. Raleigh.

A man may as well expect to grow stronger by always eating, as wiser by always reading. Too much over-charges nature, and turns more into disease than nourishment. Collier.

2. To load; to crowd too much.

Our language is over-charged with comments.
Pope.

3. To burden.

He whispers to his pillow
The secrets of his over-charged soul. Shakspeare.

4. To rate too high.

Here's Glo'ster, a foe to citizens,
Over-charging your tree purties with large fines.
Shakspeare.

5. To fill too full.

Her heart is but over-charg'd; she will recover.
Shakspeare.

The fumes of passion do as really intoxicate, and confound the judging and discerning faculty, as the fumes of drink discompose and stupify the brain of a man over-charged with it. South.

If they would make distinct abstract ideas of all the varieties in human actions, the number must be infinite, and the memory over-charged to little purpose. Locke.

The action of the Iliad and Aeneid, in themselves exceeding short, are to beautifully extended by the invention of episodes, that they make up an agreeable story sufficient to employ the memory without over-charging it. Addison.

6. To load with too great a charge.

They were
As cannons over-charg'd with double cracks. Shakspeare.

Who in deep mines, for hidden knowledge toils,
Like guns over-charg'd, break, misfire, or recoil. Denham.

To OVERCLOUD, v. a. [over and cloud.]
To cover with clouds.

The silver empress of the night,
Over-clouded, glimmers in a fainter light. Tickel.

To OVERCLOY, v. a. [over and cloy.] To fill beyond satiety.

A feast of Britons and base lackey peasants,
Whom their over-cloy'd country vomits forth
To desperate adventures and destruction. Shaksf.

OVE

To OVERCOME, v. a. part. F overcome; part. past. overcome; anciently overcome,
as in Spenser. [overcomen, Dutch.]

1. To subdue; to conquer; to vanquish,
They overcome, were deprived
Of their proud beauty, and the one moiety
Traustona'd to fish, for their bold turquedry. Spensf.

This wretched woman, overcome
Of anguish rather than of crime hath beca. Spensf.

Of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought in bondage. 2 Peter.

Fire by thicker air overcome,
And downward forc'd in earth's capacious womb,
Alters its particles; is fire no more. Prior.

2. To surmount.

Miranda is a constant relief to poor people in their misfortunes and accidents; there are sometimes little misfortunes that happen to them, which of themselves they could never be able to overcome. Law.

3. To overflow; to surcharge.

Th'unfallow'd glebe
Yearly overcome the granaries with stores. Philips.

4. To come over or upon; to invade suddenly. Not in use.

Can't such things be,
And overcome us like a summer's cloud,
Without our special wonder? Shakspeare.

To OVERCOME, v. n. To gain the superiority.

That thou mightest be justified in thy sayings, and mightest overcome when thou art judged. Romans.

OVERCOMER, n. s. [from the verb.] He who overcomes.

To OVERCOURT, v. a. [over and court.]
To rate above the true value.

Thou know'st how much
We do over-court thee. Shakspeare.

To OVERCOVER, v. a. [over and cover.]
To cover completely.

Shut me nightly in a charnel house,
Over-cover'd quite with dead men's rattling bones,
With reeky fanks and yellow chapless skulls. Shakspeare.

To OVERCROW, v. g. [over and crow.]
To crow as in triumph.

A base varlet, that being but of late grown out of the dunghill, beguneth now to over-crow so high mountains, and make himself the great protector of all our laws. Spenser.

To OVERDO, v. a. [over and do.] To do more than enough.

Any thing to over-done is from the purpose of playing; whose end is to hold the mirror up to nature. Shakspeare.

Nature so intent upon finishing her work, much sterner over-does than under-does. You shall hear of twenty animals with two heads, for one that hath none. Grew.

When the meat is over-done, lay the fault upon your lady who hurried you. Swift.

To OVERDRESS, v. a. [over and dress.]
To adorn lavishly.

In all, let nature never be forgot;
But treat the goddess like a modest fair,
Nor over-dress, nor leave her wholly bare. Pope.

To OVERDRIVE, v. a. [over and drive.]
To drive too hard, or beyond strength.

The flocks and herds with young, if men should over-drive one day, all will die. Grew.

To OVEREYE, v. a. [over and eye.]
1. To superintend.

2. To observe; to remark.

I am doubtful of your modesties,
Left over-eying of his odd behaviours,
You break into some merry passion. Shakspeare.

To OVEREMPTY, v. a. [over and empty.]
To make too empty.

The women would be loth to come behind the fashion in new-fangledness of the manner, if not in costliness of the matter, which might over-empty their husbands purses. Carew.

OVERFALL, n. s. [over and fall.] Catastrophe.

To statute addeth, that those which dwell near those falls of water, are deaf from their infancy, like those that dwell near the cataracts of Nilus. Raleigh.

To OVERFLOW, v. n. [over and flow.] To swim; to float.

The town is fill'd with slaughter, and o'erflows, With a red deluge, their increasing moans. Dryden.

To OVERFLOW, v. n. [over and flow.] 1. To be fuller than the brim can hold.

While our strong walls secure us from the foe, Ever yet with blood our ditches overflow. Dryden.
Had I the same consciousness that I saw Noah's flood, as that I saw the overflowing of the Thames last winter, I could not doubt, that I who saw the Thames overflowed, and viewed the flood at the general deluge, was the same self. Locke.

2. To exuberate; to abound.
A very ungrateful return to the Author of all we enjoy, but such as an overflowing plenty too much inclines men to make. Rogers.

To OVERFLOW, v. n. 1. To fill beyond the brim.

Suppose thyself in as great a sadness as ever did load thy spirit, would'st thou not bear it cheerfully if thou wert sure that some excellent fortune would relieve and recompense thee so as to overflow all thy hopes? Taylor.

Now milk that all the winter never fails, And all the summer overflows the pails. Dryden.

2. To deluge; to drown; to overrun; to overpower.

The Scythians, at such time as the northern nations overflowed all christendom, came down to the sea-coast. Spenser.

Clonus over-flow'd th' unhappy coast. Dryden.
Do not the Nile and the Niger make yearly inundations in our days, as they have formerly done? And are not the countries to overflow still situate between the tropics? Bentley.

Sixty or hundred odd years after the earth was made, it was overflowed and destroyed in a deluge of water, that overpread the face of the whole earth, from pole to pole, and from east to west. Burnet.

Thus oft by mariners are shown, Earl Godwin's castles overflow. Swift.

OVERFLOW, n. f. [over and flow.] Inundation; more than fulness; such a quantity as runs over; exuberance.

Did he break out into tears?—
—In great measure.—

A kind overflow of kindness. Shakespeare.
Where there are great overflows in fens, the drowning of them in winter maketh the summer following more fruitful; for that it keepeth the ground warm. Bacon.

It requires pains to find the coherence of abstruse writings: for that it is not to be wondered, that St. Paul's epistles have, with many, passed for disjointed pieces of discourses, full of warmth and zeal and overflows of light, rather than for calm, strong, coherent reasonings all through. Locke.

After every overflow of the Nile, there was not always a inundation. Arbuthnot.

The expression may be ascribed to an overflow of gratitude in the general disposition of Ulysses. Bloom.

OVERFLOWING, n. f. [from, overflow.] Exuberance; copiousness.

When men are young, they might vent the overflowings of their fancy that way. Denham.

When the overflowings of ungodliness make us afraid, the ministry of religion cannot better discharge their duty of opposing it. Rogers.

OVERFLOWINGLY, adv. [from overflowing.] Exuberantly; in great abundance. Not elegant nor in use.

Nor was it his inducement that forced him to make the world; but his goodness pressed him to impart the goods which he to overflowing abounds with. Boyle.

To OVERFLOW, v. n. [over and flow.] To cross by night.

A falling light
Can scarce overflow them in a day and night. L'Estrange.

OVERFLOWINGNESS, n. f. [over and flow.] Too great quickness; too great readiness.

By an overflowingness in courts to give countenance to frivolous exceptions, though they make nothing to the true merit of the cause, it often happens that causes are not determined according to their merits. Hale.

To OVERFREIGHT, v. a. pret. overfreighted; part. overfreighted. [over and freight.] To load too heavily; to fill with too great quantity.

A boat overfreighted with people, in rowing down the river, was, by the extreme weather, sunk. Carew.

Grief, that does not speak,
Whispers the o'erfreighted heart and bids it break. Shakespeare.

Sorrow has to o'erfreight
This sinking barque, I shall not live to shew
How I abhor my first rash crime. Denham.

To OVERGET, v. a. [over and get.] To reach; to come up with.

With his hours hard riding through so wild places, as it was rather the cunning of my horse sometimes, than of myself, to rightly to hit the way, I overgot them a little before night. Sidney.

To OVERGLANCE, v. a. [over and glance.] To look hastily over.

I have, but with a curst eye,
O'er-glanc'd the articles. Shakespeare.

To OVERGO, v. a. [over and go.] 1. To surpass; to excel.

Thinking it beyond the degree of humanity to have a wit so far overgoing his age, and such dreadful terror proceed from his excellent beauty. Sidney.
Great Nature hath laid down at last,
That mighty birth wherewith to long the went,
And overwent the times of ages past,
Here to lie in upon our soft content. Daniel.

2. To cover. Obsolete.
All which, my thoughts say, they shall never do,
But rather, that the earth shall overgo
Some one at least. Chapman.

To OVERGORGE, v. a. [over and gorge.] To gorge too much.

Art thou grown great,
And, like ambitious Sylla, overgorge'd? Shakespeare.
OVERGREAT, adj. [over and great.] Too great.

Though putting the mind unprepared upon an unusual stress ought to be avoided: yet this must not run at, by an over-great thyness of difficulties, into a lazy sauntering about obvious things. Locke.

To OVERGROW, v. a. [over and grow.] 1. To cover with growth.

Roof and floor, and walls were all of gold;
But overgrown with dust and old decay,
And hid in darkness that none could behold
The hue thereof. Spenser.

The woods and desert caves,
With wild thyme and the gadding vine o'er-grown,
And all their echoes mourn. Milton.

2. To rise above.

It is the birds be very strong and much over-grow the poles, some advise to strike oil their heads with a long switch. Mortimer.

To OVERGROW, v. n. To grow beyond the fit or natural size.

One part of his army, with incredible labour, cut a way through the thick and over-grown woods, and so came to Solymun. Knolles.

A huge over-grown ox was grazing in a meadow. L'Estrange.

Him for a happy man I own,
Whose fortune is not over-grown. Swift.

OVERGROWTH, n. f. [over and growth.] Exuberant growth.

The over-growth of some complexion,
Of breaking down the pales and forts of reason. Shakespeare.

The fortune in being the first in an invention, doth cause sometimes a wonderful over-growth in riches. Bacon.

Suspected to a sequent king, who seeks
To stop their over-growth, as in many places Too numerous.

To OVERHALE, v. a. [over and hale.] 1. To spread over.

The welked Phœbus can avail
His weary wain, and now the frosty night
Her mantle black thro' heaven gon over-hale. Spenser.

2. To examine over again; as, he overhauled my account.

To OVERHALE, v. a. [over and hale.] To jut over.

Lend the eye a terrible aspect,
Let the brow overwhelm it,
As fearfully as doth a galled rock
O'er-hang and jutting his confounded base. Shaksp.

Hide me, ye forests, in your closet bow'rs,
Where flows the mourning brook, inviting dreams,
Where bounding hazel over-hangs the stream. Gay.

If you drink tea upon a promontory that overhangs the sea, it is preferable to an assembly. Pope.

To OVERHANG, v. n. To jut over.

The rest was craggy cliff, that over-hung Still as it rose, impossible to climb. Milton.

To OVERHARDEN, v. a. [over and harden.] To make too hard.

By laying it in the air, it has acquired such a hardness, that it was brittle, like over-hardened steel. Boyle.

OVERHEAD, adv. [over and head.] Aloft; in the zenith; above; in the ceiling.

Over-head the moon
Sits arbitress, and nearer to the earth Wheels her pale course. Milton.

The four stars over head represent the four children. Addison.

To OVERHEAR, v. a. [over and hear.] To hear those who do not mean to be heard.

I am invisible,
And I will over-hear their conference. Shakespeare.

They had a full sight of the Infanta at a minkie dancing, having overheard two gentlemen who were tending towards that sight, after whom they pressed. Wotton.

That such an enemy we have who seeks
Our ruin, both by thee inform'd I learn,
And from the parting angel overheard. Milton.

They were so loud in their discourse, that a blackberry from the next hedge overheard them. L'Estrange.

The nurse,
Though not the words, the murmurs overheard. Dryden.

The witness over-hearing the word pillory repeated, sunk away privately. Addison.

To OVERHEAT, v. a. [over and heat.] To heat too much.

Pleas'd with the firm and coolness of the place,
And over-heated by the morning chace. Addison.

It must be done upon the receipt of the wound, before the patient's spirits be over-heated with pain or fever. Whistler.

To OVERHEED, v. a. [over and head.] To overlook; to reach.

As his fair person flying through a brook,
He over-heed nought moved with her piteous look. Spenser.

To OVERJOY, v. a. [over and joy.] To transport; to ravish.

He that puts his confidence in God only, is neither over-joyed in any great good things of this life, nor sorrowful for a little thing. Taylor.

The bishop, partly astonished and partly over-joyed with these speeches, was struck into a wild silence for a time. Hayward.

This love-sick virgin over-joyed to find
The boy alone still follow'd him behind. Addison.

OVERJOY, n. f. Transport, ecstasy.

The mutual conference that my mind hath had,
Makes me the bolder to salute my king
With roder terms; such as my wit affords,
And over-joy of heart doth minister. St. Asaph.

To OVERLABOUR, v. a. [over and labour.]

To take too much pains on any thing; to harass with toil.
 Th. without noise will over-see
 His children and his family;
 And order all things till he come,
 Sweets and over-labour'd home. Dryden.

To OVERLAD. v. a. [over and load.] To overburden.

Thus to throng and over-lade a soul
 With love, and then to have a room for fear,
 That shall all that controul,
 What is it but to rear
 Our passions and our hopes on high,
 That thence they may defy
 The noblest way how to despair and die? Suckling.

OVERLARGE. adj. [over and large.] Larger than enough.

Our attainments cannot be over-large, and yet we manage a narrow fortune very unthriftily. Cotter.

OVERLASHINGLY. adv. [over and lash.] With exaggeration. A mean word, now obsolete.

Although I be far from their opinion who write too over-lashingly, that the Arabian tongue is in use in two third parts of the inhabited world, yet I find that it extendeth where the religion of Mahomet is professed. Hicrewood.

To OVERLAY. v. a. [over and lay.]

1. To oppress by too much weight or power.

Some commons are barren, the nature is such, And some over-layeth the commons too much. Tupper.

Not only that mercy which keepeth from being over-laid and oppress, but mercy which favours from being touched with grievous miseries. Hooker.

When any country is over-laid by the multitude which live upon it, there is a natural necessity compelling it to disburthen itself and lay the load upon others. Raleigh.

We praise the things we hear with much more willingness than those we see; because we envy the present, and reverence the past; thinking ourselves instructed by the one, and over-laid by the other. Ben Jonson.

Good laws had been antiquated by the course of time, or over-laid by the corruption of manners. King Charles.

Our sins have overlaid our hopes. King Charles.
 The strong Emectrics came in Arcite's aid,
 And Palamon with odds was over-laid. Dryden.

2. To smother with too much or too close covering.

Nor then destroys it with too fond a stay,
 Like mothers, which their infants over-lay. Milton.

The new-born babes by surles over-laid. Dryden.

3. To smother; to crush; to overwhelm.

They quickly stifled and over-laid those infant principles of piety and virtue, sown by God in their hearts; so that they brought a voluntary darkness and stupidity upon their minds. South.

The gods have made your noble mind for me,
 And her insipid soul for Ptolemy:
 A heavy lump of earth without desire,
 A heap of ashes that o'er-lays your fire. Dryden.

The stars, no longer, over-laid with weight,
 Exert their heads from underneath the mists,
 And upward shoot. Dryden.

Season the passions of a child with devotion, which seldom dies, though it may seem extinguished for a while, it breaks out as soon as misfortunes have brought the man to himself. The fire may be covered and over-laid, but cannot be entirely quenched and smothered. Addison.

In preaching, no men succeed better than those who trust to the fund of their own reason, advanced but not over-laid by commerce with books. Swift.

4. To cloud; to overcast.

Phœbus' golden face it did attain,
 As when a cloud his beams doth over-lay. Spenser.

5. To cover superficially.

The over-laying of their chapters was of silver, and all the pillars were filleted with silver. Erasmus.

By his precept a sanctuary is fram'd
 Of cedar, over-laid with gold. Milton.

6. To join by something laid over.

Thou art impow'rd
 To fortify thus far, and over-leap,
 With this portentous bridge, the dark abyss. Milton.
 To OVERLEAP. v. a. [over and leap.] To pass by a jump.

A step
 On which I must fall down or else o'er-leap. Shakespeare.

For in my way it lies.
 In vain did nature's wife command
 Divide the waters from the land;
 If daring ships and men profane
 Th' eternal fences over-leap. Dryden.

OVERLEATHER. n. s. [over and leather.] The part of the shoe that covers the foot.

I have sometimes more feet than shoes; or such shoes as my toes look through the over-leather. Shakespeare.

OVERLIGHT. n. s. [over and light.] Too strong light.

An over-light maketh the eyes dark, inasmuch as perpetual looking against the sun would cause blindness. Bacon.

To OVERLIVE. v. a. [over and live.] To live longer than another; to survive; to outlive.

Mulidorus, who shewed a mind not to over-live Pyrocles, prevailed. Sidney.

He concludes in hearty prayers,
 That your attempts may over-live the hazard
 And fearful meeting of their opposite. Shakespeare.

They over-lived that envy, and had their pardons afterwards. Hayward.

To OVERLIVE. v. n. To live too long.

Why do I over-live?
 Why am I mock'd with death, and lengthen'd out
 To deathless pain? Milton.

OVERLIVE. n. s. [from overlive.] Survivor; that which lives longest.

A peace was concluded, to continue for both the king's lives, and the over-liver of them. Bacon.

To OVERLOAD. v. a. [over and load.] To burden with too much.

The memory of youth is charged and over-loaded, and all they learn is mere jargon. Felton.

Men over-loaded with a large estate
 May spill their treasure in a nice conceit;
 The rich may be confute, but oh 'tis sad,
 To lay you're curious, when we swear you're mad. Young.

OVERLONG. adj. [over and long.] Too long.

I have transgressed the laws of oratory, in making my periods and parentheses over-long. Boyle.

To OVERLOOK. v. a. [over and look.]

1. To view from a higher place.

The pile o'er-look'd the town, and drew the fight,
 Surpass'd at once with reverence and delight. Dryden.

I will do it with the same respect to him, as if he were alive, and over-looking my paper while I write. Dryden.

2. To view fully; to peruse.

Would I had o'er-look'd the letter. Shakespeare.

3. To superintend; to oversee.

He was present in person to over-look the magistrates, and to overawe those subjects with the terror of his sword.

In the greater out-parishes many of the poor parishioners through neglect do perish, for want of some heedful eye to over-look them. Grunt.

4. To review.

The time and care that are required,
 To over-look and file, and polish well,
 Fright poets from that necessary toil. Roscommon.

5. To pass by indulgently.

This part of good-nature which consists in the pardoning and over-looking of faults, is to be exercised only in doing ourselves justice in the ordinary commerce of life. Addison.

In vain do we hope that God will over-look such high contradiction of sinners, and pardon offences committed against the plain convictions of conscience. Rogers.

6. To neglect; to slight.

Of the two relations, Christ over-looked the meaner, and denominated them solely from the manner of his death. South.

To OVERLOOK the entertainment before him, at length for that which lies out of the way, sickly and servile. Cottle.

The suffrage of our poet laureate should not be over-looked. Addison.

Religious fear, when produced by just apprehensions of a divine power, naturally overlooks all human greatness that stands in competition with it and extinguishes every other terror. Addison.

The happiest of mankind, over-looking that solid blessings which they already have, set the hearts upon somewhat they want. Atterbury.

They over-look truth in the judgments they pass on adversity and prosperity. The temptations attend the former they can easily see, and dread at distance; but they have no apprehensions of the dangerous consequences of the latter. Atterbury.

OVERLOOKER. n. s. [over and look.] The original word signifies an over-looker, or one who stands higher than his fellows and overlook them. Wat.

OVERLOOP. n. s. The same with orlop.

In extremity we carry our ordinance better than we were wont, because our nether over-loops are raised commonly from the water; to wit, between the lower part of the port and the sea. Raleigh.

OVERMASTED. adj. [over and mast.] Having too much mast.

Cloanthus better mann'd, pursu'd him fast,
 But his o'er-masted gally check'd his haste. Dryden.

To OVERMASTER. v. a. [over and master.] To subdue; to govern.

For your desire to know what is between us,
 O'er-master it as you may. Shakespeare.

So sleeps a pilot, whose poor bark is prest
 With many a merciless o'er-mast'ring wave. Croft.

They are over-mastered with a score of drunkards, the only soldiery left about them, or else comply with all rapines and violences. Milne.

To OVERMATCH. v. a. [over and match.] To be too powerful; to conquer; to oppress by superiour force.

I have seen a swan
 With bodiless labour swim against the tide,
 And spend her strength with over-matching waves. Shakespeare.

Sir William Lucy, with me
 Set from our o'er-matched forces forth for aid. Shakespeare.

Affix, lest I who erst Thought none my equal, now be over-matched. Paradise Regained.

How great soever our curiosity be, our excess is greater, and does not only over-match, but surpass it. Decay of Piety.

He from that length of time dire omens drew,
 Of English over-matched, and Dutch too strong,
 Who never fought three days but to pursue. Dryden.

It moves our wonder, that a foreign guest
 Should over-match the moat, and match the best. Dryden.

OVERMATCH. n. s. [over and match.] One of superiour powers; one not to be overcome.

Spain is no over-match for England, by that which leadeth all men; that is, experience and reason. Bacon.

Ever was his over-match, who self-deceiv'd
 And rash, before-hand had no better weigh'd
 The strength he was to cope with or his own. Milne.

In a little time there will scarce be a woman of quality in Great-Britain, who would not be an over-match for an Irish prince. Addison.

OVERMEASURE. n. s. [over and measure.] Something given over the due measure.

To OVERMIX. v. a. [over and mix.] To mix with too much.

Those things that are o'er-mix'd, no joys shall know.
 Or little benefit over-mix'd with woe. Clerk.

OVERMUCH. adj. [over and much.] Highest; over the full authority. Ansforth.

OVERMUCH. adj. [over and much.] Too much; more than enough.

It was the system of these sumnerages, in their over-much greatness, to advance the first authors of any useful discovery among the number of their gods.

An over-much use of salt, besides that it occasions thirst and over-much drinking, has other ill effects.

OVERMUCH. adv. In too great a degree.

The fault which we find in them is, that they over-much abridge the church of her power in their things. Whereupon they re-charge us, as if in these things we gave the church a liberty which hath no limits or bounds.

Perhaps
I also erred, in over-much admiring
What seem'd in thee so perfect, that I thought
No evil durst attempt thee.

Deject not then so over-much thyself,
Who hast of sorrow thy full load besides.

OVERMUCH. n. f. More than enough.

By attributing over-much to things
Less excellent, as thou thyself perceiv'st.
With respect to the blessings the world enjoys,
even good men may ascribe over-much to themselves.

OVERMUCHNESS. n. f. [from overmuch.]
Exuberance; superabundance. A word not used nor elegant.

There are words that do as much raise a style, as others can depress it: superlatives and over-muchness amplifies. It may be above faith, but not above a mean.

TO OVERNAME. v. a. [over and name.]
To name in a series.

Over-name them; and as thou namest them I will describe them.

OVERNIGHT. n. f. [over and night.] This seems to be used by Shakespeare as a noun, but by Addison more properly, as I have before placed it, as a noun with a preposition. Night before bedtime.

If I had given you this at over-night,
She might have been o'er-taken.

Will confesses, that for half his life his head ached every morning with reading men over-night.

TO OVEROFFICE. v. a. [over and office.]
To lord by virtue of an office.

This might be the fate of a politician which this is over-offices.

OVEROFFICIOUS. adj. [over and officious.]
Too busy; too importunate.

This is an over-officious truth, and is always at a man's heels; so that if he looks about him, he must take notice of it.

TO OVERPASS. v. a. [over and pass.]
1. To cross.

I flood on a wide river's bank,
Which I must needs over-pass.

When on a sudden Torridum appear'd,
Gave me his hand, and led me lightly o'er.

What have my Scyllas and my Syrtis done,
When these they over-pass, and those they shun?

2. To overlook; to pass with disregard.

The complaint about psalms and hymns might as well be over-pass without any answer, as it is without any cause brought forth.

I read the satire thou outtest first,
And laid aside the rest, and over-pass'd.

And swore, I thought the writer was accurst,
That his first satire had not been his last.

Remember that Pellean conqueror,
A youth, how all the beauties of the east

He slightly view'd, and slightly over-pass'd.

3. To omit in a reckoning.

Arithmetical progression demonstrates how fast mankind would increase, over-passing as miraculous, though indeed natural, that example of the Israelites, who were multiplied in two hundred and fifteen years, from seventy to sixty thousand able men.

4. To omit; not to receive; not to compare.

If the grace of him which over-passeth
VOL. II.

come, so that the prayers of the church for them be not received, this we may leave to the hidden judgments of righteous deities.

OVERPASS. part. adj. [from overpass.]
Gone; past.

What can't thou swear by now?—
—By time to come—

That thou hast wronged in the time o'er-pass'd.

TO OVERPAY. v. a. [over and pay.] To reward beyond the price.

Take this purse of gold,
And let me buy your fidelity to thus far,

Which I will over-pay, and pay again,
When I have found it.

You have yourself your kindness over-paid,
He ceases to oblige who can upbraid.

Wilt thou with pleasure hear thy lover's strains,
And with one heavenly make o'er-pay his pains?

TO OVERPERCH. v. a. [over and perch.]
To fly over.

With love's light wings did I o'er-perch these walls,

For stony limits cannot hold love out.

TO OVERPEER. v. a. [over and peer.] To overlook; to hover above. Out of use.

The ocean over-peering of his life,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste,

Than young Laertes, in a riotous head,
O'er-hears your officers.

Your argosies with portly sail,
Do over-peer the petty trader's.

That curli'd to them, do thus reverence.

Mountainous error would be too highly heap'd,
For truth to over-peer.

Thus yields the cedar to the ax's hedge,
Whose top branch over-peer'd Jove's spreading tree,

And kept low shrubs from winter's pow'ful wind.

They are invincible by reason of the over-peering mountains that back the one, and slender fortifications of the other to landward.

OVERPLUS. n. f. [over and plus.] Surplus; what remains more than sufficient.

Some other sinners there are, from which that overplus of strength in persuasion doth arise.

A great deal too much of it was made, and the overplus remained still in the mortar.

It would look like a fable to report, that this gentleman gives away all which is the overplus of a great fortune.

TO OVERPLY. v. a. [over and ply.] To employ too laboriously.

What supports me, dost thou ask?
The conscience, friends, I have lost them over-plied.

In liberty's defence.

TO OVERPOISE. v. a. [over and poise.] To outweigh.

Whether cripples who have lost their thighs will stout, their lungs being able to wait up their bodies, which are in others over-poised by the hinder legs, we have not made experiment.

The tide
O'er-weigh'd by darkness, lets the night prevail;

And day, that lengthen'd in the summer's height,
Shortens till winter, and is lost in night.

OVERPOISE. n. f. [from the v. b.] Preponderant weight.

Horace, in his first and second book of odes, was still rising, but came not to his meridian till the third.

After which his judgment was an over-poise to his imagination. He grew too cautious to be bold enough, for he defended in his fourth by slow degrees.

Some over-poise of sway by turns they share,
In peace the people, and the prince in war.

TO OVERPOWER. v. a. [over and power.] To be predominant over; to oppress by superiority.

Now in danger try'd, now known in arms
Not to be over-powered.

As much light over-powers the eye, so they who have weak eyes, when the ground is covered with snow, are wont to complain of too much light.

Reason allows none to be confident, but him only who governs the world, who knows all things, and can do all things; and can neither be surprised nor over-powered.

After the death of Crassus, Pompey found himself outwitted by Cæsar, he broke with him, over-powered him in the senate, and caused many unjust decrees to pass against him.

The infernal make these mountains the standards of the rise of the water; which they could never have been, had they not been standing when it did so rise and over-passed the earth.

Intemperance, when such an over-powering impulse not any proposition is made upon the mind by God himself, that gives a convincing and indubitable evidence of the truth and divinity of it.

When a prince enters on a war, he ought naturally to consider whether his soldiers be full, his people rich by a long peace and free trade, not over-pressed with many burthenome taxes.

TO OVERPRIZE. v. a. [over and prize.] To value at too high price.

Parents over-prize their children, while they behold them through the vapours of affection.

OVERRANK. adj. [over and rank.] Too rank.

It produces over-rank binds.

TO OVERRATE. v. a. [over and rate.] To rate at too much.

While van flows and scenes you over-rate,

'Tis to be fear'd,——

That as a fire the former house o'erthrow,

Machines and tempests will destroy the new.

To avoid the temptations of poverty, it concerns us not to over-rate the conveniences of our station, and in estimating the proportion fit for us, to fix it rather low than high; for our desires will be proportioned to our wants, real or imaginary, and our temptations to our desires.

TO OVERREACH. v. a. [over and reach.] 1. To rise above.

The mountains of Olympus, Athos, and Atlas, over-reach and surmount all winds and clouds.

Sixteen hundred years after the earth was made, it was overflowed in a deluge of water in such excess, that the floods over-reached the tops of the highest mountains.

2. To deceive; to go beyond; to circumvent. A fugacious man is said to have a long reach.

What more cruel than man, if he see himself able by fraud to over-reach, or by power to over-bear the laws whereunto he should be subject?

I have had my brain in the sun and dried it, that it wou'd matter to prevent so gross over-reaching.

Shame to be overcome, or over-reach'd,

Would utmost vigour raise, and raise'd unite.

A man who had been matchless bold

In cunning, over-reach'd where least he thought,

To save his credit, and for very spite

Still will be tempting him who foils him still.

There is no plantainer encounter than a trial of skill betwixt sharpers to over-reach one another.

Forbidding oppression, defrauding and over-reaching one another, perfidiousness and treachery.

We may no more sue for them than we can tell a lie, or swear an unlawful oath, or over-reach in their cause, or be guilty of any other transgression.

Such a principle is ambition, or a desire of fame, by which many vicious men are over-reached, and engaged contrary to their natural inclinations in a glorious and laudable contest of action. Addison.

John had got an impression that Lewis was so deadly envious a man, that he was afraid to venture himself alone with him; at last he took heart of grace, let him come up, quoth he, it is but sticking to my point, and he can never over-reach me. History of John Bull.

To OVERRRACH. v. n. A horse is said to over-reach, when he brings his hinder feet too far forward, and strikes his toes against his fore-shoes. Farris's Dict.
OVERREACHER. n. f. [from overreach.] A cheat; a deceiver.

To OVER-READ. v. a. [over and read.] To peruse.

The contents of this is the return of the duke; you shall anon over-read it at your pleasure. Shakspeare.
To OVER-RED. v. a. [over and red.] To finish with red.

Prick thy face and over-red thy fear,
Thou lily-liver'd boy. Shakspeare.

To OVER-RIPEN. v. a. [over and ripen.] To make too ripe.

Why droops my lord, like an over-ripen'd corn,
Hanging the head with Ceres' plenteous load? Shakspeare.

To OVER-ROAST. v. a. [over and roast.] To roast too much.

I was burnt and dried away,
And better I were, that both of us did fast,
Stare of ourselves, ourselves are choleric,
Than feed us with such over-roasted flesh. Shakspeare.

To OVERRULE. v. a. [over and rule.]

1. To influence with predominant power; to be superiour in authority.

Which humour perceiving to over-rule me, I strive against it. Sidney.

That which the church by her ecclesiastical authority shall probably think and desire to be true or good, must in congruity of reason over-rule all other inferior arguments whatsoever. Hooker.

Except our own private, and but probable resolutions, be by the law of publick determinations over-ruled, we take away all possibility of sociable life in the world. Hooker.

What if they be such as will be over-ruled with some one, whom they dare not dispute? Whitgift.

His passion and animosity over-ruled his consideration. Clarendon.

A wise man shall over-rule his fears, and have it greater influence upon his own content, than all the consolations and pleasures of the firmament. Taylor.

He is acted by a passion which absolutely over-rules him, and so can no more recover himself, than a bowl rolling down an hill stop itself in the midst of its career. South.

This temerity for men to venture their lives upon unequal encounters; and is where they are obliged by an over-riding impulse of confidence and duty. L'Estrange.

A man may, by the influence of an over-riding passion, be inclined to lust, and yet by the force of reason overcome that bad inclination. Swift.

2. To govern with high authority; to superintend.

Wherefore does he not now come forth and openly over-rule, as in other matters he is accustomed? Hagyard.

3. To supersede; as, in law, to over-rule a plea, is to reject it as incompetent.

Thirty acres make a farthing land, nine farthings a Cornish acre, and four Cornish acres a knight's fee. But this rule is over-ruled to a greater or lesser quantity, according to the fruitfulness or barrenness of the soil. Carew.

To OVERRUN. v. a. [over and run.]

1. To harass by incursions; to ravage; to rove over in a hostile manner.

Those barbarous nations that over-run the world, possess those dominions, whereof they are now to be called. Spenser.

Till the tears she shed,
Like envious floods over-run her lovely face,
She was the fairest creature on the world. Shakspeare.

They err, who count it glorious to subdue
By conquest far and wide, to over-run
Large countries, and in field great battles win, Great cities by assault. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The nine
Their fainting foes to shameful flight compell'd,
And with relentless force over-run the field. Dryden.
Gustavus Adolphus could not enter this part of the empire after having over-run most of the rest. Addison.

A commonwealth may be over-run by a powerful neighbour, which may produce bad consequences upon your trade and liberty. Swift.

2. To outrun; to pass behind.

Pyrocles being come to sixteen, over-run his age in growth, strength, and all things following it, that not Mafidius could perform any action on horse or foot more strongly, or deliver that strength more nimbly, or become the delivery more gracefully, or employ all more virtuously. Sidney.

We may outrun
By violent swiftness, that which we run at,
And lose by over-running. Shakspeare.

Ahimaz ran by the way of the plain, and over-ran Canaan. 2 Samuel.

Galileus noteth, that if an open trough, wherein water is, be driven faster than the water can follow, the water gathereth upon a heap towards the hinder end, where the motion began; which he supposeth, holding the motion of the earth to be the cause of the ebbing and flowing of the ocean; because the earth over-runneeth the water. Bacon.

3. To overspread; to cover all over.

With an over-running flood he will make an utter end of the place. Nahum.

This disposition of the parts of the earth, shews us the foot-steps of some kind of ruin which happened in such a way, that at the same time a general flood of waters would necessarily over-run the whole earth. Burnet.

His tears detain'd the surface of the wall,
And now the lovely face but half appears,
Over-run with wrinkles and deform'd with tears. Addison.

4. To mischief by great numbers; to pester.

To flatter foolish men into a hope of life where there is none, is much the same with betraying people into an opinion that they are in a virtuous and happy state, when they are over-run with passion, and drowned in their lusts. L'Estrange.

Were it not for the incessant labours of this industrious animal, Egypt would be over-run with crocodiles. Addison.

Such provision made, that a country should not want springs as were convenient for it; nor be over-run with them, and afford little or nothing else; but a supply every where suitable to the necessities of each climate and region of the globe. Woodward.

5. To injure by treading down.

6. Among printers, to be obliged to change the disposition of the lines and words in correcting, by reason of the insertions.

To OVERRUN. v. n. To overflow; to be more than full.

Though you have left me,
Yet still my soul over-runs with fondness towards you. Smith.

Cattle in inclosures shall always have fresh pasture, that now is all trampled and over-run. Spenser.

To OVERSEE. v. a. [over and see.]

1. To superintend; to overlook.

He had charge my discipline to frame,
And tutor's nouriture to oversee. Spenser.
She without noise will oversee
His children and his family. Dryden.

2. To overlook; to pass by unheeded; to omit.

I who resolve to oversee
No lucky opportunity,
Will go to council to advise
Which way I'll encounter, or forprise. Hudibras

OVERSEEN. part. [from oversee.] Mistaken; deceived.

A common received error is never utterly over-thrown, till such time as we go from signs unto causes, and then some manifest root or fountain thereof common unto all, whereby it may clearly appear it hath come to pass that so many have been overseen. Hooker.

Such overseers, as the overseers of this building, would be so overseen as to make that which is narrower, contain that which is larger. Holyday.

They rather observed what he had done and suffered for the king and for his country, without farther enquiring what he had omitted to do, or been overseen in doing. Clarendon.

OVERSEER. n. f. [from oversee.]

1. One who overlooks; a superintendent.

There are in the world certain voluntary overseers of all books, whose censure would fall sharp on us. Hooker.

Jehiel and Azariah were overseers unto Cononiah. Chronicles.

To entertain a guest, with what a care
Wou'd he his household ornaments prepare;
Harass his servants, and as overseer stand,
To keep them working with a thrusting wand:
Clean all my plate, he cries. Dryden.

2. An officer who has the care of the parochial provision for the poor.

The churchwardens and overseers of the poor might find it possible to discharge their duties, whereas now in the greater out-parishes many of the poorer parishioners, through neglect, do perish for want of some heedful eye to overlook them. Grant.

To OVERSET. v. a. [over and set.]

1. To turn bottom upward; to throw off the basis; to subvert.

The tempests met,

The sailors masted, and the ship over-set. Dryden.
It is forced through the hiatuses at the bottom of the sea with such vehemence, that it puts the sea into horrible perturbation, even when there is not the least breath of wind; upsetting ships in the harbours, and sinking them. Woodward.

Would the confederacy exert itself as much to annoy the enemy, as they do for their defence, we might bear them down with the weight of our armies, and over-set the whole power of France. Addison.

2. To throw out of regularity.

His action against Castille ruined the Consul, when it saved the city; for it so twell'd his soul, that ever afterwards it was apt to be over-set with vanity. Dryden.

To OVERSET. v. n. To fall off the basis, to turn upside down.

Part of the weight will be under the axle-tree, which will so far counterpoise what is above it, that it will very much prevent the over-setting. Mortimer.

To OVERSHADE. v. a. [over and shade.]

To cover with any thing that casts darkness.

Dark cloudy death over-shades his beams of life,
And he not sees, nor hears us. Shakspeare.

No great and mighty subject might eclipse or over-shade the imperial power. Bacon.

If a wood of leaves over-shade the tree,
In vain the bird shall vex the thieving floor,
For empty chaff and straw will be thy store. Dryden.

Should we mix our friendly talk,
Over-shaded in that favourite walk,
Both pleas'd with all we thought we wanted. Pope.

To OVERSHADOW. v. a. [over and shadow.]

1. To throw a shadow over any thing.

Weeds choke and over-shadow the corn, and let it down, or flave and deprive it of nourishment. Bacon.

Death,

Let the damps of thy dull breath,
Over-shadow even the shade,
And make darkness self afraid. Craford

Darkness must over-shadow all his bounds,
Palpable darkness, and blot out three days. Milton.

2. To shelter; to protect; to cover with superiour influence.

My over-shadowing spirit and might, with thee
I send along; ride forth, and bid the deep Within appointed bounds. Milton.

On her should come
The Holy Ghost, and the power of the Highest Over-shadow her. Milton.

To OVERTAKE, v. a. [over and shoot.]
To fly beyond the mark.

Often a drop, or over-shoots by the disproportion of distance or application. Collier.

To OVERSHOOT, v. a.

1. To shoot beyond the mark.
Every voracious appetite defeats its own satisfaction, by over-shooting the mark it aims at. Tillotson

2. To pass swiftly over.

High-raised on fortune's hill, new alps he spies,
O'ershoots the valley which beneath him lies,
Forgets the depths between, and travels with his eyes. Harte.

3. To venture too far; to assert too much: with the reciprocal pronoun.

Leave it to themselves to consider, whether they have in this point or not over-shot themselves; which is quickly done, even when our meaning is most sincere. Hooker.

In judging fault with the laws, I doubt me, you shall much over-shoot yourself, and make me the more dislike your other dislikes of that government. Spenser on Ireland.

For any thing that I can learn of them, you have over-shot yourself in reckoning. Whitgift.

OVERSIGHT, n. f. [from over and sight.]

1. Supertendence.

They gave the money, being told, unto them that had the oversight of the house. 2 Kings.

Feed the flock of God, taking the oversight the coat, not by constraint, but willingly. 1 Peter.

2. Mistake; error.

Amongst so many huge volumes, as the infinite pains of St. Augustine have brought forth, what one hath gotten greater love, commendation, and honour, than the book wherein he carefully owns his oversight and sincerely condemneth them? Hooker.

They watch their opportunity to take advantage of their adventures oversight. Attlewell.

Not to his son, he mark'd this oversight.

And then mistook reverse of wrong for right. Pope.

To OVERSIE, v. a. [over and size.]

2. To pass over.

Mak it to get them the over-skip the rest,

Mak it to read them twice, or kiss the name. Donne.

3. To escape.

When that hour o'er-skip me in the day,

When I high not, Julia, for thy sake;

The next ensuing hour some soul mischance

Torment me. Shakespeare.

Who alone suffers, suffers more i' th' mind;

But then the mind much sufferance does o'er'skip,

When grief hath mates and bearing fellowship. Shakespeare.

To OVERSLEEP, v. a. [over and sleep.]

To sleep too long.

To OVERSLIP, v. a. [over and slip.]

To pass undone, unnoticed, or unasked; to neglect.

The carelessness of the justices in imposing this rate, or the negligence of the constables in collecting it, or the backwardness of the inhabitants in paying the same, over-slipped the time. Carew.

He that hath over-slipped such opportunities, is to bewail and retrieve them betimes. Hammond.

It were injurious to over-slip a noble act in the duke during this employment, which I must celebrate above all his expenses. Hammond.

To OVERSNOW, v. a. [over and snow.]

bulkin, or an over-staring frowne'd head. Stichon.

To OVERSTOCK, v. a. [over and stock.]

To fill too full; to crowd.

Had the world been eternal, it must long ere this have been overstocked, and become too narrow for the inhabitants. Watkins.

If rallery had entered the old Roman coars,

we should have been overstocked with medals of this nature. Addison.

Some bishop, not overstock'd with relations, or attached to favourites, bestows some considerable benefice. Swift.

Since we are so bent upon enlarging our flocks,

it may be worth enquiring what we shall do with our wool, in case Barabaple should be overstocked. Swift.

To OVERSTOCK, v. a. [over and stock.]

To store with too much.

Fish is more numerous than beasts or birds, as appears by their numerous spawn; and it all these should come to maturity, even the ocean itself would have been long ere overstocked with fish. Hale.

To OVERSTRAIN, v. a. [over and strain.]

To make too violent efforts.

Crassus lost himself, his equipage, and his army,

by overstraining for the Parthian gold. Collier.

When his banks the prince of rivers, Po,
Doth o'er-swell, he breaks with hideous fall. Faiffr.

OVERT, adj. [overt, Fr.] Open; public; apparent.

To touch this, is no proof,

Without more certain and more overt test,

Than these thin habits and poor likelihoods. Shelton.

Overt and apparent virtues bring forth praise, but these be secret and hidden virtues that bring forth to fame; certain deliveries of a man's felt. Tacon.

My spouse at Hull, was the first overt city to be made how patiently I could bear the loss of my kingdoms. King Charles.

The design of their defection may have been projected in the dark, but when all was ripe, their secrecy proceeded to no many overt acts in the face of the nation, that it was obvious to the meanest. Swift.

Who read human laws can reach no farther than to reach on the overt action, religion extends to the secret motions of the soul. Hegdon.

To OVERTAKE, v. a. [over and take.]

1. To catch any thing by pursuit; to come up to something going before.

We durst not continue longer to near her confines, lest her plagues might suddenly overtake us before we did come to be partakers with her sins. Hooker.

If I had given you this at over-night,

She might have been o'er-taken, and yet she writes

Pursuit would be but vain. Shakespeare.

I shall see

The winged vengeance o'er-take such children. Shakespeare.

The enemy said, I will pursue, I will overtake,

I will divide the spoil. Psalms.

My soul, more earnestly relend'd,

Will outstrip hers, as bold as dawn before

A later ballet may overtake, the powder being more. Donne.

To thy wiles move a speedy pace,

Or death will soon overtake thee in the chase. Druden.

How much he tremble for fear vengeance should overtake him, before he has made his peace with God? Hegdon.

2. To take by surprise.

If a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual restore such an one in the spirit of meekness. Galatians.

2. To reach beyond the truth of any thing in thought; especially in the opinion of a man's self. Hammer.

Oh have I seen a hot overweening ear,
Run back and bite, because he was with-field. Shakspere.

My master hath sent for me, to whose feeling sorrows I might be some allay, or I overween to think so. Shakspere.

Lads hence these overweening rage of France,
These famish'd beggars, weary of their lives. Shakspere.

My eye's too quick, my heart o'erween too much,
Unless my hand and strength could equal them. Shakspere.

Take heed of overweening, and compare
Thy peacock's feet with thy gay peacock's train;
Study the best and highest things that are,
But of thyself an humble thought retain. Darvies.

They that overween,
And at thy growing virtues fret their spleen,
No anger find in thee. Milton.

Satan might have learnt
Less overweening, since he fail'd in Job, Whole constant perseverance overcame
Whate'er his cruel malice could invent. Milton.

No man is so bold, rash, and overweening of his own works, as an ill painter and a bad poet. Dryden.

Enthusiasm, though founded neither on reason nor revelation, but rising from the conceits of a warmed or overweening brain, works more powerfully on the passions and actions of men, than either or both together. Locke.

Men of fair minds and not given up to the overweening of self-flattery, are frequently guilty of it, and, in many cases, one with an amazement hears the arguments, and is astonished at the obtuseness of a worthy man who yields not to the evidence of reason. Locke.

Now enters overweening pride,
And scandal ever gaping wide. Swift.

OVERWEENINGLY, adv. [from overween.] With too much arrogance; with too high an opinion.

TO OVERWEIGH, v. a. [over and weigh.]

To preponderate.

Sharp and subtle discourses of wit, procure many times very great applause, but being laid in the balance with that which the habit of sound experience delivereth, they are overweighed. Hooker.

My unfold'd name, th' sufferance of my life,
Will to your accusation overweigh,
That you shall suffice in your own report. Shaksp.

OVERWEIGHT. n. f. [over and weight.] Preponderance.

Sinking into water is but an overweight of the body, in respect of the water. Bacon.

To OVERWHELM. v. a. [over and whelm.]

1. To crush underneath something violent and weighty.

What age is this, where honest men,

Plac'd at the helm,
A sea of folly rous'd to wrath or pen,
Shall'st thou not? Ben Jonson.

Back do I to thee inclinations to thy head,

With the helm-hat. The overwhelm thy heart. Shaksp.

How trifling an apprehension is the shame of being laughed at by fools, when compared with that everlasting shame and abasement which shall overwhelm the sinner when he shall appear before the tribunal of Christ? Hogers.

Blind they reject, though now even now they fall,

Death halts a man, one hour overwhelms them all. Pope.

2. To overlook gloomily.

Let the brow overwhelm it,

As fearfully as with a galled neck

Overhang and jutting his confounded base. Shaksp.

A prophetic cry late I heard,

In tattoo'd weeds with overwhelming brows,

Culling of staples. Shaksp. are.

OVERWHELMINGLY. adv. [from over-whelm.] In such a manner as to overwhelm. Inelegant, and not in use.

Men should not tolerate themselves one minute in any known sin, nor impudently betray their souls to ruin for tea, which they call light and trivial; which is to be wicked in respect of the acquit, but overwhelmingly ponderous in regard of the pernicious consequences. Dewey of Unity.

OVERWISE. adj. [over and wise.] Wise to affliction.

Make not thyself overwise. Ecclesiasticus.

Are mighty goddesses in this matchy. Shakspere.

OVERWROUGHT. part. [over and wrought.]

1. Labour'd too much.

Apelles' soul of Protegens, that he knew not when to give over. A work may be overwrought, as well as underwrought; too much labour often take away the spirit, by adding to the pushing; so that there remains nothing but a dull correctness, a piece without any considerable faults, but with few beauties. Dryden.

2. Worked all over.

Of Gothick structure was the northern side,

Overwrought with ornaments of barbarous pride. Pope.

3. It has in Shakspere a sense which I know not well how to reconcile to the original meaning of the word, and therefore conclude it is corrupted for overwrought; that is, overreached or cheated.

By some device or other,

The villain is overwrought of all my money;

They say this town is full of cozenage. Two Gentlemen of Verona.

one way or the other, as some overzealous set of against the immateriality of the soul, have been forward to make the world believe. Lacke.

OUGH. n. f. [aphit, that is, a unit, Sax.]

This word is therefore more properly written ought. See AUGHT.] Any thing; not nothing.

For ought that I can understand, there is no part but the bare English pale, in which the Irish have not the greatest footing. Spenser on Ireland.

He asked him if he law ought. Mark.

To do ought good never will be our talk;

But ever to do ill our sole delight. Milton.

Universal Lord! be bounteous still

To give us only good; and if the night

Have gather'd ought of evil, or conceal'd,

Disperse it, as now light dispels the dark. Milton.

OUGH. verb imperfect; in the second person oughtest. [This word the etymologists make the preterit of owe, but it has often a present signification.

1. [preterit of owe.] Owed; was bound to pay; have been indebted.

Apprehending the occasion, I will add a contribution to that happy motion, and besides give you some tribute of the love and duty I long have ought you. Spelman.

This blood which men by treason fought,

That followed, fir, which to myself I ought. Dryd.

2. To be obliged by duty.

She acts just as the ought,

But never, never reach'd one gen'rous thought. Pope.

Judges ought to remember, that their office is to interpret the law, and not to make or give law. Bacon.

We ought to profess our dependance upon him, and our obligations to him for the good things we enjoy. We ought to publish to the world or bank of his goodness with the voice of praise, and tell of all his wondrous works. We ought to comfort his servants and children in their afflictions, and relieve his poor distressed members in their manifold necessities, for he that giveth alms, his teeth praise. Nelson.

3. To be fit; to be necessary.

These things ought not to be. James.

If grammar ought to be taught, it must be to one that can speak the language already. Lacke.

4. Applied to persons it has a sense not easily explained. To be fit, or necessary that he should.

Ought not Christ to have suffered? Lacke.

5. Ought is both of the present and past tenses, and of all persons except the second singular.

OVERFORM. adj. [over and forma, Latin.]

Having the shape of an egg.

This notion of the mundane egg, or that the world was overform, hath been the fable and language of all antiquity. Bacon.

OVERPAROUS. adj. [over and parous, Latin.]

Bringing forth eggs; not viviparous.

That fishes and birds should be overparous, is a plain sign of Providence. Mor.

Birds and overparous creatures have eggs every h at first conceived in them to serve them for many years: laying. Ray.

OUNCE. n. f. [once, Fr. men, Latin.] A name of weight of different value in different denominations of weight. In troy weight, an ounce is twenty pennyweights;

a pennyweight twenty-four grains.

The blood he bathed,

Which I dare vouch is more than that he hath

By many an ounce, he drop'd it for his country. Shakspere.

OUTHEN. adj. [from ouphe.] Elfish.

Fairies, black, gray, green, and white,

Ye moon-shine revellers and shades of night,

You ouphen heirs of fixed destiny,

Attend your office. Shakspere.

OUR. pron. poss. [une, Sax.]

1. Pertaining to us; belonging to us.

You shall

Lead our first battle, brave Macduff, and we Shall take upon us what else remains. Shakspere.

Our wit is given almighty God to know;

Our will is given to love him being known;

But God could not be known to us below,

But by his works which through the sense are shown.

So in our little world this soul of ours

Being only one, and to one body ty'd,

Doth life on divers objects divers powers,

And to use her effects diversity'd. Davies.

Our soul is the very same being it was yesterday,

last year, twenty years ago. Beattie.

2. When the substantive goes before, it is written ours.

Edmund, whose virtue in this instance,

So much commands itself, you shall be ours. Shakspere.

their courts, which is now done by us in suing in ours. Ketticworth.

Reading furnishes the mind only with material of knowledge, it is thinking makes what we read ours; it is not enough to cram ourselves with a great load of collections; unless we chew them over again, they will not give us strength. Lacke.

Their organs are better disposed than ours, for receiving grateful impressions from sensible objects. Atterbury.

OURSELVES. reciprocal pronoun. [the plural of myself.]

1. We; not others; it is added to we by way of emphasis or apposition.

He ourselves might distinctly number in words a great deal farther than we usually do, would we had out but some fit denominations to signify them

by. Lacke.

2. Us; not others; in the oblique cases.

Sate in ourselves, while on ourselves we stand,

The sea is ours, and that defends the land. Dryd.

Our confession is not intended to instruct God, who knows our sins much better than ourselves do,

but it is to humble ourselves, and therefore we must not think to have confided ought till that be done. Duty of Man.

OURSELF is used in the royal style.

To make society

The sweeter welcome, we will keep ourself

Till supper time alone. Shakspere.

We ourself will follow

In the man battle. Shakspere.

by a plane parallel to one of its sides, or parallel to a plane that touches one side of the cone. Hutton.

Had the velocities of the several planets been greater or less than they are now, at the same distances from the sun, they would not have revolved in concentric circles as they do, but have moved in hyperbolas or parabolas, or in ellipses, very exacted. Newton.

PARABOLICAL, adj. [parabolique, Fr.]

from parabole.]

1. Expressed by parable or similitude.

Such from the text deny the parabolical exposition of Cyprian. Brown.

The tale me of these words is figurative, as being a parabolical description of God's vouching to the world the invaluable blessing of the gospel, by the similitude of a lamb. Smith.

2. Having the nature or form of a parabola. [from parabola.]

The pellucid coat of the eye doth not lie in the same superficies with the white, but push up a hillock, about its convexity, and is of an hyperbolic or parabolical figure. Ray.

The incident ray will describe, in the reflecting medium, the parabolical curve. Chrys.

PARABOLICALLY, adv. [from parabolical.]

1. By way of parable or similitude.

These words, notwithstanding parabolically intended, admit no literal inference. Brown.

2. In the form of a parabola.

PARABOLISM, n. f. In algebra, the division of the terms of an equation, by a known quantity that is involved or multiplied into the square of the abscissa, to be equal to the cube of the ordinate, then the curve is called a semicubical parabola.

Harris.

PARACENTRICAL. n. f. [παράκεντρον, παράκεντρον, to pierce; paracentric, Fr.] That operation, whereby any of the venters are perforated to let out any matter; as tapping in a tympany.

PARACENTRICAL. adj. [παράκεντρον] PARACENTRICK. adj. Deviating from centrality.

Since the planets move in the elliptic orbits, in one of whose foci the sun is, and by a radius from the sun describe equal areas in equal time, without finding out a law for the paracentric motion, that may make the orbits elliptic.

Chapman.

PARADE. n. f. [parade, French.]

1. Show; ostentation.

He is not led to this as to a review, but as to a battle, not adorned for parade, but execution.

At least, before your master's debts are paid.

2. Procession; assembly of pomp.

The int' p'form'd the paragon parade.

3. Military order.

The charabanc stood arm'd

PARADISE. n. f. [παράδεισος; paradise, French.]

1. The blissful regions, in which the first pair was plac'd.

Linger in that paradise to dwell,

The law I gave to man him forbids.

2. Any place of felicity.

Confidantion, like an angel, came,

And whet th' offending Adam out of him;

Leaving his body as a paradise.

Envelope and contain celestial spirit.

If he should lend her into a tools paradise,

It were very gross behaviour.

Why, nature, bow the spirit of a fiend

In mortal paradise of such sweet flesh!

The earth

Shall all be paradise, far happier place

Than this of Eden, and far happier days.

PARADISICAL. adj. [from paradise.]

Suiting paradise; making paradise.

The ancient expects the situation of paradisiacal earth in reference to the sea.

Such a mediocrity of heat would be to far from evaluating the earth to a more happy and paradisa-cal state, that it would turn it to a barren waste.

The summer is a kind of heaven, when we wander in a paradisiacal scene, among groves and gardens; but, at this season, we are like our poor

first parents, turned out of that agreeable, though solitary life, and forced to look about for more people to help to bear our labours, to get into warmer houses, and live together in cities.

PARADOX. n. f. [paradoxe, Fr. παράδοξος.]

A tenet contrary to received opinion; an assertion contrary to appearance;

a position in appearance absurd.

A globe there is to colour that paradox, and make it appear if they not to be altogether unreasonable.

You undergo too strict a paradox,

Striving to make an ugly deed look fair.

'Tis an unnatural paradox in the doctrine of causes, that evil should proceed from goodness.

In their love of God men can never be too affectionate: it is as true, though it may seem a paradox, that in their hatred of sin, men may be

'Tis not impossible for men in the wits, though never so much addicted to paradoxes, to believe otherwise, but that the whole is greater than the part, that contradictions cannot be both true, that three and three make six; that four is more than three.

Watkins.

PARADOXICAL. adj. [from paradox.]

1. Having the nature of a paradox.

What hath been every where opinioned by all men, is more than paradoxical to dispute. Strange it is, how the curiosity of men, that have been active in the infirmary of heads, among those many paradoxes and unlearned imitations, should not attempt to make one track.

Thomson.

These will seem strange and paradoxical to one that takes perspective of the world.

North.

2. Inclined to new tenets, or notions contrary to received opinions.

PARADOXICALITY. adv. [from paradox.]

In a paradoxical manner; in a manner contrary to received opinions.

PARADOXICALNESS. n. f. [from paradox.]

State of being paradoxical.

PARADOXICALITY. n. f. [from paradox.]

The use of paradoxes.

He spent the day in study, which obscurity, or understandable paradoxicality, must put upon the at-tempter.

PARADOXICAL. n. f. [παράδοξος; paradoxical, Fr.]

A figure whereby a letter or syllable is added at the end of a word, without adding any thing to the sense of it:

as, roughly, roughly.

PARADOXICALITY. n. f. [from paradoxical.]

1. A model; a pattern; something supremely excellent.

An angel, or, if not,

An earthly paragon.

Louis was never graced before with such a para- gon to their queen.

2. Companion; fellow.

Alone he rode without his paragon.

PARAGON. n. f. [παράγων, from paragon, equality, old Fr. paragone, Italian.]

1. To compare; to parallel; to mention in competition.

The picture of Pamela, in little form, he wore in a tablet, purporting to paragon the little one with

Artelia's length, not doubting but even, in that little quantity, the excellency of that would shine through the weakness of the other.

Let give thee bloody teeth,

If thou with Caesar paragon again

My man of men.

Proud test

Of Leicester, to by allusion call'd

Of that bright star to Satan paragon'd.

2. To equal; to be equal to.

He hath achiev'd a maid

That paragon description and wild fame

One that excels the quirk of blazoning pens.

We will wear our mortal state with her,

Catherine our queen, before the primed creature

That's paragon'd to the world.

PARAGRAPHS. n. f. [paragraphe, Fr. παράγραφη.]

A distinct part of a discussion.

Of his last paragraph, I have transcribed the most important parts.

PARAGRAPHICALLY. adv. [from paragraphe.]

By paragraphs; with distinct breaks or divisions.

PARALLACTICAL. adj. [from parallax.]

PARALLACTICK. adj. Pertaining to a parallax.

PARALLAX. n. f. [παράλλαξις.]

The distance between the true and apparent place of the sun, or any star viewed from the surface of the earth.

By what strange parallax or optical fall

Of vision multiply'd.

Light moves from the sun to us in about seven or eight minutes time, which distance is about 70,000,000 English miles, supposing the horizontal parallax of the sun to be about twelve seconds.

Newton.

PARALLEL. adj. [παράλληλος; parallele, Fr.]

1. Extended in the same direction, and preserving always the same distance.

But among the order and theory of causes perpendicular to their effects, he draws them aside into things whereto they run parallel, and their proper tendencies would never meet together.

2. Having the same tendency.

When honour runs parallel with the laws of God and our country, it cannot be too much cherished, but when the dictates of honour are contrary to those of religion and equity, they are the great de-pravations of human nature.

3. Continuing the resemblance through many particulars; equal; like.

The foundation principle of perpetuity is exactly parallel to an acknowledged nothing.

I shall observe something parallel to the wooing and wedding suit in the behaviour of persons of figure.

In the parallel place before quoted.

Compare the words and phrases in one place of an author, with the same in other places of the same author, which are generally called parallel places.

PARALLELITY. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. Line continuing its course, and still remaining at the same distance from another line.

Who made the spider parallel design,

Sure as De Moivre, without rule or line?

2. Line on the globe marking the latitude.

3. Direction conformable to that of another line.

Bidemens, like small streams, are first begun,

Scarcely seen they rise, but gather as they run,

So lines, that from their parallel decline,

More they parallel, they more they full-blown.

4. Resemblance; conformity continued through many particulars; likeness.

Such a resemblance of all parts,

Life, death, age, fortune, nature, arts;

She lights her torch at theirs to tell,

And flew the world this parallel.

'Twas castly females and the moon,

All parallel exactly run.

5. Comparison made.

The parallel holds in the game of chess, as well as laboriousness of the work.

A reader cannot be more rationally entertained, than by comparing and drawing a parallel between his own private character, and that of other persons.

6. Any thing resembling another.

Thou ungrateful brave, if thou wouldst but thy parallel, go to hell, which is both the region and the emblem of ingratitude.

For works like parallel, let deathless journals tell.

None but thyself can be thy parallel.

TO PARALLEL. v. d. [from the noun.]

1. To place, so as always to keep the same direction with another line.

The Azores having a middle situation between these continents and that vast tract of America, the needle seemeth equally distracted by both, and diverting unto neither, doth parallel and place it tell upon the true meridian.

2. To keep in the same direction; to level.

The loyal sufferers abroad became subjected to the worst effect of banishment, and even there expelled and driven from their slights; so parallel in their exigencies the most immediate objects of that murder's fury.

His life is parallel d

Ev'n with the stroke and line of his great judgment.

3. To correspond to.

That he stretched out the north over the empty places, seems to parallel the expression of David, he stretched out the earth upon the waters. Burnet.

4. To be equal to; to resemble through many particulars.

In the fire, the destruction was so swift, sudden, vast, and miserable, as nothing can parallel in story. Dryden.

5. To compare.

I parallel'd more than once our idea of substance, with the Indian philosopher's he-knew-not-what, which supported the tortoise. Locke.

PARALLELISM. n. f. [parallelisme, Fr. from parallel.] State of being parallel.

The parallelism and due proportioned inclination of the axis of the earth. More.

Speaking of the parallelism of the axis of the earth, I demand, whether it be better to have the axis of the earth steady and perpetually parallel to itself, or to have it eternally tumbling this way and that way. Ray.

PARALLELOGRAM. n. f. [παράλληλον and γραμμή; parallelograme, Fr.] In geometry, a right-lined quadrilateral figure, whose opposite sides are parallel and equal. Harris.

The experiment we made in a loadstone of a parallelogram or long figure, wherein only inverting the extremities, as it came out of the fire, we altered the poles. Brown.

We may have a clear idea of the area of a parallelogram, without knowing what relation it bears to the area of a triangle. Watts.

PARALLELOGRAMICAL. adj. [from parallelogram.] Having the properties of a parallelogram.

PARALLELOPIPED. n. f. [parallelopipe, Fr.] A solid figure contained under six parallelograms, the opposites of which are equal and parallel; or it is a prism, whose base is a parallelogram: it is always triple to a pyramid of the same base and height. Harris.

Two prisms alike in shape I tied so, that their axes and opposite sides being parallel, they composed a parallelopipe. Newton.

Crystals that hold lead are yellowish, and of a parallelopipe figure. Woodward.

PARALOGISM. n. f. [παράλογισμος; paralogisme, Fr.] A false argument.

That because they have not a bladder of gall, that those we observe in others, they have no gall at all, is a paralogism, not admissible, a fallacy that dwells not in a cloud, and needs not the sun to stir it. Brown.

Modern writers, making the drachma less than the denarius, others equal, have been deceived by a parablepism, in standing too nicely upon the few words of the ancients, without examining the things. Arbutnot.

If a syllogism agree with the rules given for the construction of it, it is called a true argument; if it disagree with these rules, it is a paralogism, or false argument. Watts.

PARALOGY. n. f. False reasoning.

That Methuselah was the longest liver of all the posterity of Adam, we quietly believe; but that he outlived his father, is perhaps below paralogy to us. Brown.

PARALYSIS. [παράλυσις; paralytic, Fr.]

A palsy.

PARALYTICAL. adj. [from paralysis;

PARALYTICK. adj. paralytique, French.]

Fallied; inclined to palsy.

Nought shall it profit, that the charming fair, Angelic, softest work of Heaven, draws near To the cold shaking paralytick hand, Senseless of beauty. Prior.

If a nerve be cut, or straightly bound, that goes to any muscle, that muscle itself immediately loses its motion: which is the case of paralyticks. Dehaan.

The difficulties of breathing and swallowing, without any tumour after long diseases, proceed commonly from a resolution or paralytick dissolution of the parts. Arbutnot.

PARAMETER. n. f. The latus rectum of a parabola, is a third proportional to the abscissa and any ordinate; so that the square of the ordinate is always equal to the rectangle under the parameter and abscissa; but, in the ellipse and hyperbola, it has a different proportion. Harris.

PARAMOUNT. adj. [per and mount.]

1. Superiour; having the highest jurisdiction: as, lord paramount, the chief of the feignory: with to.

League, within the state are ever pernicious to monarchies; for they raise an obligation, paramount to obligation of sovereignty, and make the king, tanquam unus ex nobis. Bacon.

The dogmatist's opinioned assurance is paramount to argument. Glauville.

If all power be derived from Adam, by divine institution, this is a right antecedent and paramount to all government; and therefore the positive laws of men cannot determine that which is itself the foundation of all law. Locke.

Mankind, seeing the apostles possessed of a power plainly paramount to the powers of all the known beings, whether angels or demons, could not question their being inspired by God. Hesl.

2. Eminent; of the highest order.

John a Chamber was hanged upon a gibbet raised a stage higher in the midst of a square gallows, as a traitor paramount, and a number of his chief accomplices were hanged upon the lower story round him. Bacon.

PARAMOUNT. n. f. The chief.

In order came the grand infernal peers, Midst came their mighty paramount. Milton.

PARAMOUR. n. f. [par and amour, Fr.]

1. A lover or wooer.

Upon the floor
A lovely bevy of fair ladies sat,

PARAPHRASE. n. f. [παράφρασις; paraphrase, Fr.] A loose interpretation; an explanation in many words.

Altho' the laws of nations were but a paraphrase upon this standing rectitude of nature, that was ready to enlarge itself into suitable determinations, upon all emergent objects and occasions. South.

In paraphrase, or translation with latitude, the author's words are not to strictly followed as for sense, and that too amplified, but not altered: such is Mr. Waller's translation of Virgil's fourth Aeneid. Dryden.

TO PARAPHRASE. v. n. [paraphrase, Fr. παράφραζω.] To interpret with laxity of expression; to translate loosely.

We are put to confound and paraphrase our own words, to free ourselves from the ignorance and notice of our adversaries. Stillingfleet.

What needs he paraphrase on what we mean? We were of worth but warden, he's obdurate Diogenes.

Where translation is impracticable, they may paraphrase—But it is intolerable, that, under a pretence of paraphrasing and translating, a way should be suffered of treating authors to a manifest disadvantage. Felton.

PARAPHRASE. n. f. [paraphrase, French; παράφρασις.] A lax interpreter; one who explains in many words.

The text for public audience are such as following a middle course between the rigour of literal translators and the liberty of paraphrasts, do, with great shortness and plainness, deliver the meaning. Hopler.

The Chaldean paraphrast renders Genah by Meath. Arbutnot.

PARAPHRASICAL. adj. [from paraphrase.] Lax in interpretation; not literal; not verbal.

PARAPHRASIS. n. f. [παράφρασις and φωσις; paraphrasis, Fr.]

Paraphrenitis is an inflammation of the diaphragm. The symptoms are a violent fever, a most exquisite pain increased upon inspiration, by which it is distinguished from a pleurisy, in which the greatest pain is in expiration. Arbutnot.

PARAQUTTO. n. f. A little parrot.

PARASANG. n. f. [parasang, low Latin.] A Persian measure of length.

Since the mind is not able to frame an idea of any space without parts, instead thereof it makes use of the common measures, which, by familiar use, in each country, have imprinted themselves on the memory, as inches and feet, or cubits and parasangs. Locke.

PARASITE. n. f. [parasite, Fr. parasite, Lat.] One that frequents rich tables, and earns his welcome by flattery.

He is a flatterer.

A parasite, a keeper back of death,
Who gently would dissolve the hands of life,
Which false hopes linger. Shakspere.

Most smiling, smooth, detested parasites,
Courteous destroyers, affable wolves, sleek bears,
You fools of fortune. Shakspere.

Diogenes, when mice came about him, as he was eating, said, I see that even Diogenes nourishes parasites. Bacon.

Thou, with trembling fear,
Or like a fawning parasite, obey'd;
Then to thyself ascrib'd the truth foretold. Milton.

The people sweat not for their king's delight,
To enrich a pump, or raise a parasite. Dryden.

PARASITICAL. adj. [parasitique, French]

PARASITICK. adj. [from parasite.] Flattering; wheedling.

1. A small bundle.

2. A part of the whole; part taken separately.

Women, Silviu, had they mark'd him
In parcels, as I did, would have come near
To fall in love with him. Shakespeare.

I drew from her a prayer of earnest heart,
That I would a tiny parcels de late,
Whereby parcels the last forsaking hand,
But not distinctly. Shakespeare.

An inventory thus importing
The several parcels of his plate, his treasure, Rich stuffs and ornaments of household. Shakespeare.

With what else could such a great man have begg'd
Such a parcel of the crown land, one a vast sum Of money, another the forfeited estate? Davenant.

I have known pensions given to particular persons,
Any one of which, if divided into smaller parcels, and distributed to those who distinguish themselves by wit or learning, would answer the end. Swift.

The same experiments succeed on two parcels of the white of an egg, only it grows somewhat thicker upon mixing with an acid. Arbutnot.

3. A quantity or mass.

What can be rationally conceived in so transparent a substance as water for the production of these colours, besides the various sizes of its fluid and globular parcels? Newton.

This youthful parcel
Of noble batchelors found at my bestowing. Shaksp.

5. Any number or quantity in contempt.

They came to this conclusion, that unless they could, by a parcel of far words and pretences, engage them into a confederacy, there was no good to be done. Ejthange.

TO PARCEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To divide into portions.

If they allot and parcel out several perfections to several deities, do they not, by this, alert contradictions, making duty only to such a measure perfect? who rears a deity implies perfection beyond all measure. South.

Those ghostly kings would parcel out my power,
And all the parcels of my land devoured. Dryden.

2. To make up into a mass.

What a wounding shame, that mine own servant should parcel the tunc of my disgrace by addition of his envy! Shakespeare.

PARCENER. n. f. [In common law.] When one dies possessed of an estate, and having issue only daughters, or his sisters be his heirs; so that the lands descend to those daughters or sisters: these are called parceners, and are but as one heir. Ditt.

PARCENARY. n. f. [from parsonier, Fr.]
A holding or occupying of land by more persons pro indiviso, or by joint tenants, otherwise called coparceners: for if they refuse to divide their common inheritance, and chuse rather to hold it jointly,

they are said to hold in parcenaria.

Corwell.

TO PARCH. v. a. [from παραίω, says Junius; from percoquo, says Skinner; neither of them seem satisfied with their conjecture. perhaps from perustus, burnt, to parust, to parch; perhaps from parch- ment, the effect of fire upon parchment being almost proverbial.] To burn slightly and superficially; to scorch; to dry.

Hadst thy fiery heart to parch thine entrails,
That not a tear can fall? Shaksp. care.

Lid he to often lodge in open field
In winter's cold, and summer's parching heat,
To conquer France? Shaksp. care.

Torrid heat,
And vapours as the Libyan air adust,
Begun to parch that temperate clime. Milton.

I'm parch'd with sorrow, past relief
Of tears, parch'd up and wither'd with my grief.
Dryden.

Without this circular motion of our earth, one hemisphere would be condemned to perpetual cold and darkness, the other continually roasted and parch'd by the sun beams. Ray.

The Syrian star
With his sultry-breath infects the sky;
The ground below is parch'd, the heavens above us
dry. Dryden.

Full sixty years
I have inur'd the biting winter's blast,
And the feverish heats of parching summer. Rome.

The skin grows parch'd and dry, and the whole body lean and meagre. Blackmore.

A man distressed with thirst in the parch'd places of the wilderness, searches every pit, but finds no water. Rogers.

TO PARCH. v. n. To be scorched.

We were better parch in Atrick tun,
Than in the pride and fair scorn of his eyes. Shaksp.

If to prevent the acrospiring, it be thrown thin,
many corns will dry and parch into barley. Mortimer.

PARCHMENT. n. f. [parchemin, Fr. perga- menta, Lat.] Skins dressed for the writer.

Among traders, the skins of sheep are called parchment, those of calves vellum.

Is not this a lamentable thing, that the skin of an innocent lamb should be made parchment; that parchment, being scribbled o'er, should undo a man? Shakespeare.

In the coffin, that had the books, they were found as fresh as if newly written, being written in parch- ment, and covered with watch candles of wax. Bacon.

Like flying shades before the clouds we flew,
We parch like parchment in consuming flame. Dryden.

PARCHMENT-MAKER. n. f. [parchment and maker.] He who dresses parchment.

PARDA. } n. f. [pardus, pardalis, Lat.]

PARDALE. } The leopard; in poetry, any of the spotted beasts.

The pardale swift, and the tyger cruel. Spenser.

As pard to lambs, as wolf to hater's calf;
As pard to the hind, or step-dame to her son. Shaksp.

Ten brace of grey-hounds, snowy fair,
And tall as flags, ran loose, and cours'd around his chair.
A match for parde in sight, in grappling for the bear. Dryden.

But they ne'er pardon who commit the wrong. Dryden.

3. To remit a penalty.

That thou may'st see the difference of our spirit,
I pardon thee thy life before thou ask it. Shaksp.

4. Pardon me, is a word of civil denial, or slight apology.

Sir, pardon me, it is a letter from my brother.
Shakespeare.

PARDON. n. f. [pardon, Fr. from the verb.]

1. Forgiveness of an offender.

He that pleaskth great men, shall get pardon for iniquity. Ecclesiasticus.

A slight pamphlet, about the elements of architecture, had been entertained with some pardon
among my friends. Wotton.

What minute in pardon is my judge.
What better can we do than prostitute Othello to him reverent, and there confess Humbly our faults, and pardon beg, with tears Waiting the ground? Milton.

There might you see Indulgences, dispenses, pardons, bulls,
The sport of winds. Milton.

3. Remission of penalty.

4. Forgiveness received.

A man may be wise as to his condition, but, in the mean time, dark and doubtful as to his apprehensions: secure in his pardon, but miserable in the ignorance of it, and to passing all his days in the disconsolate, uneasy vicissitudes of hopes and fears, at length go out of the world, not knowing whether he goes. South.

5. Warrant of forgiveness, or exemption from punishment.

The battle done, and they within our power,
Shall never see his pardon. Shakespeare.

PARDONABLE. adj. [pardonable, Fr. from pardon.] Venial; excusable.

That which we do being evil, is notwithstanding by to much more pardonable, by how much the experience of to doing, or the difficulty of doing otherwise, is greater, unless this necessity or difficulty have originally risen from ourselves. Hobbes.

A blind man sitting in the chimney corner is par- dorable enough, but sitting at the helm, he is in-ferable. South.

What English readers, unacquainted with Greek or Latin, will believe me, when we confess we derive all that is pardonable in us from ancient fountains? Dryden.

PARDONABLENESS. n. f. [from pardon- able.] Venialness; susceptibility of pardon.

St. John's word is, all sin is transgression of the law, St. Paul's, the wages of sin is death: put these two together, and this concept of the natural pardonableness of sin vanishes away. Hall.

PARDONABLY. adv. [from pardonable.]
Venially; excusably.

I may judge when I write more or less pardon- ably. Dryden.

PARDONER. n. f. [from pardon.]

1. One who forgives another.

This is his pardon, purchased by such sin,
For which the pardon himself is sin. Shakespeare.

2. One of the fellows that carried about the pope's indulgences, and sold them to such as would buy them, against whom Luther incited the people of Germany. Corwell.

TO PARE. v. a. [This word is reasonably deduced by Skinner from the French phrase, parer les ongles, to dress the horses' hoofs when they are shayed by the farrier: thus we first said, pare your nails; and from this transferred the word to general use.] To cut off extremities of the surface; to cut away by little and little; to diminish. If pare be used before the thing diminished, it is followed immediately by its accusative;
if it precedes the thing taken away, or agrees in the passive voice with the thing taken away, as a nominative, it then requires a particle: as, away, off.

The creed of Athanasius, and that stored hymns of glory than which nothing doth sound more heavenly in the ears of faithful men, are now reckoned as superfluities, which we must in any case pare away, lest we cloy God with too much service. Hooker.

I have not alone
Employ'd you where high profits might come home;
But par'd my present havings to bestow
My bounties upon you. Shakspeare.

I am a man, whom fortune hath cruelly scratch'd,
'Tis too late to pare her nails now. Shakspeare.

The lion, mov'd with pity, did endure
To have his princely paws all par'd away. Shakspeare.
The king began to pare a little the privilege of clergy, ordaining that clerical convicts should be burned in the hand. Bacon.

Pick out of tales the mirth, but not the sin,
He pares his apple, that will cleanly feed. Herbert.
Whoever will partake of God's secrets, must first look into his own, he must pare off whatsoever is earthly, and not without holiness approach to the holiest of all holies. Taylor.

All the mountains were par'd off the earth, and the surface of it lay even, or in an equal convexity every where with the surface of the sea. Burnet.

The most poetical parts, which are description and images, were to be par'd away, when the body was swollen into too large a bulk for the representation of the stage. Dryden.

The sword, as it was justly drawn by us, so can it scarce safely be sheathed, till the power of the great trouble of our peace be so far par'd and reduced, as that we may be under no apprehensions. Atterbury.
'Twere well if she would pare her nails. Pope.

PARAGORICK. adj. [παράγορος.] Having the power in medicine to comfort, mollify, and assuage. Dict.

PARENCHYMA. n. f. [παρῆχυμα.] A spongy or porous substance: in physics, a part through which the blood is strained for its better fermentation and perfection. Dict.

PARENCHYMATOUS. } adj. [from παρ-PARENCHYMOUS. } enchyma. Relating to the parenchyma; spongy.

Ten thousand seeds of the plant heart's-tongue, hardly make the bulk of a pepper-corn. Now the covers and true body of each seed, the parenchymatous and ligneous parts of both moderately multiplied, afford an hundred thousand millions of formed atoms in the space of a pepper corn. Gray.

Those parts, formerly reckoned parenchymatous, are now found to be bundles of exceedingly fine threads. Cheyne.

PARÆNEISIS. a. f. [παράίνεσις.] Persuasion; exhortation. Dict.

PARÆNETICK. [παράινετικός.] Hortatory.

PARENT. n. f. [parent, Fr. parens, Lat.] A father or mother.

All true virtues are to honour true religion as their parent, and all well ordered commonwealths to love her as their chiefest stay. Hooker.

His custom was, during the warmer season of the year, to spend an hour before evening-prayer in calculating; whereof the parents and older folk were wont to be present. Lett.

As a publick parent of the state,
My justice, and thy crime, requires thy fate. Dryd.

In vain on the dissembled mother's tongue
Had cunning art and fly persuasion hung;
And real care in vain and native love
In the true parent's pining breast had strove. Prior.

PARENTAGE. n. f. [parentage, Fr. from parent.] Extraction; birth; condition with respect to the rank of parents.

A gentleman of noble parentage.
Of fair demeanour, youthful and nobly allied. Shakspeare.
Though men esteem thee low of parentage,
Thy father is th' eternal king. Milton.

To his lovee go,
And from himself your parentage may know. Dryd.

We had him not only boasting of his parentage, as an Israelite at large, but particularizing his descent from Benjamin. Atterbury.

PARENTERAL. adj. [from parent.] Becoming parents; pertaining to parents.

It overthrows the careful counsels and parental provision of nature, whereby the young ones, newly excluded, are sustained by the dam. Brown.

These eggs hatched by the warmth of the sun into little worms, feed without any need of parental care. Berham.

Young ladies, on whom parental caution sits heavily, give a man of intrigue room to think that they want to be parents. Clerissa.

PARENTATION. n. f. [from parentis, Lat.] Something done or said in honour of the dead.

PARENTHESIS. n. f. [parenthese, Fr. παρεσις, iv, and παρασις.] A sentence so included in another sentence, as that it may be taken out, without injuring the sense of that which encloses it: being commonly marked thus, ().

In vain is any person excepted by a parenthesis of words, when so many are added against me with force. King Charles.

In his Indian relations, are contained strange and incredible accounts: he is seldom mentioned, without a derogatory parenthesis, in any author. Brown.

Thou shalt be seen,
Tho' with some short parenthesis between,
High on the throne of wit. Dryden.

Don't fuller every occasional thought to carry you away into a long parenthesis, and thus stretch out your discourse, and divert you from the point in hand. Watts.

PARENTHETICAL. adj. [from parenthesis.] Pertaining to a parenthesis.

PARER. n. f. [from para.] An instrument to cut away the surface.

A hone and a parer, like sole of a boot,
To pare away grass, and to raise up the root. Tupper.

PARERGY. n. f. [παρά and εργον.] Something unimportant; something done by the by.

Scripture being serious, and commonly omitting such parergies, it will be unreasonable to condemn all laughter. Brown.

PARGET. n. f. Plaster laid upon roofs of rooms.

Gold was the parget, and the ceiling bright
Did shine all fealy with great plates of gold.
The floor with jasp and emerald was drest. Spenser.

Of English tale, the coarser sort is called plaster or parget: the finer, spand. Woodward.

To PARGET. v. a. [from the noun.] To plaster; to cover with plaster.

There are not more arts of disguising our corporeal blemishes than our moral; and yet, while we thus paint and parget our own deformities, we cannot allow any the least imperfection of another's to remain undetected. Government of the Tongue.

PARGETER. n. f. [from parget.] A plasterer.

PARHELION. n. f. [παρά and ἥλιος.] A mock sun.

To neglect that supreme prebendancy that shines in God, for those dull representations of it that we do set on in the creature, is as absurd, as it were for a Persian to offer his sacrifice to a parhelion, instead of adoring the sun. Boyle.

PARIETAL. adj. [from paries, Lat.] Constituting the sides or walls.

The lower part of the parietal and upper part of the temporal bones were fractured. Sharp.

PARIETARY. n. f. [parietaire, Fr.] An herb.

PARING. n. f. [from pare.] That which is pared off any thing; the rind.

Virginity breeds mates, much like a cheese; and consumes itself to the very paring. Shakspeare.

To his guest tho' no way sparing,
He cut himself the rind and paring. Pope.

In May, after rain, pare off the surface of the earth, and with the parings raise your hills high, and enlarge their breadth. Mortimer.

PARIS. n. f. [aconitum.] An herb. Ainsl.

PARISH. n. f. [parochia, low Lat. paroche, Fr. of the Greek παροικία, i. e. accollarum conventus, accolatus, sacra vicinia.] The particular charge of a secular priest.

Every church is either cathedral, conventual, or parochial: cathedral is that where there is a bishop seated, so called a cathedra: conventual consists of regular clerks, professing some order of religion, or of a dean and chapter, or other college of spiritual men: parochial is that which is instituted for saying divine service, and administering the holy sacraments to the people, dwelling within a certain compass of ground near unto it. Our realm was first divided into parishes by Honorius, archbishop of Canterbury, in the year of our Lord 636. Council.
Daniel came piping and dancing, the merriest man in a parish. Sidney.

By the catholic church is meant no more than the common church, into which all such persons as belonged to that parish, in which it was built, were wont to congregate. Pearson.

The tythes, his parish freely paid, he took;
But never tild, or curs'd with bell or book. Dryden.

PARISH. adj.

1. Belonging to the parish; having the care of the parish.

A parish priest was of the pilgrim train,
An awful, reverend, and religious man. Dryden.
Not parish clerk, who calls the psalms to clear. Gay.

The office of the church is performed by the parish priest, at the time of his interment. Ayliffe.
A man after his natural death, was not capable of the least parish office. Arbuthnot.
The parish allowance to poor people, is very seldom a comfortable maintenance. Lath.

2. Maintained by the parish.
The ghost and the parish girl are entire new characters. Gay.

PARISHIONER. n. f. [paroisien, Fr. from parish.] One that belongs to the parish.
I praise the Lord for you, and so may my parishioners; for their sons are well tutored by you. Shakspeare.

Hail bishop Valentine, whose day this is,
All the air is thy domain;
And all the chirping choughs
And other birds are the parishioners. Donne.

In the greater out-parishes, many of the parishioners, through neglect, do perish. Graunt.

I have deposited thirty marks, to be distributed among the poor parishioners. Addison.

PARITOR. n. f. [for apparitor.] A beadle; a summoner of the courts of civil law.

You shall be summoned by an host of paritors; you shall be sentenced in the spiritual court. Dryd.

PARTITY. n. f. [partité, Fr. paritas, Lat.] Equality; resemblance.

We may here justly tax the dishonesty and shamefulness of the month, who have upbraid us with the opinion of a certain fabled parity of sins. Hall.

That Christ or his apostles ever commanded to set up such a parity of prebsters, and in such a way as those Scots endeavour, I think is not very disputable. King Charles.

Survey the total set of animals, and we may, in their legs or organs of progression, observe an equality of length and parity of nomenclature; not any to have an odd leg, or the movers of one side not exactly answered by the other. Brown.

Note accidental occurrences, which excited Socrates to the discovery of such an invention, might tell us with that man that is of a perfect parity with Socrates. Hale.

Their agreement in essential characters, makes rather an identity than a parity. Glanville.

Women could not live in that parity and equality of expence with their husbands, as now they do. Graunt.

By an exact parity of reason, we may argue, if a man has no sense of those kindnesses that pass upon him, from one like himself, whom he sees and knows, how much less shall his heart be affected with the grateful sense of his favours, whom he con-verses with only by imperfect speculations, by the discourses of reason, or the discoveries of faith. South.

PARK. n. f. [peapnac, Sax. parc, French.]

A piece of ground enclosed and stored with wild beasts of chase, which a man may have by prescription or the king's grant.

Manwood, in his forest-law, defines it thus: a park is a place full privilege for wild beasts of venery, and also for other wild beasts that are beasts of the forest and of the chase: and those wild beasts are to have a firm peace and protection there, so that no man may hurt or chase them within the park, without license of the owner: a park is of another nature, than either a chase or a wren; for a park must be inclosed, and may not be open; if it does, it is a good cause of seizure into the king's hands; and the owner cannot have action against such a hunt in his park, if it lies open. Cowell.

We have parks and inclosures of all sorts of beasts and birds, which we use not only for view or curies, but likewise for diversions and trials. Bacon.

To PARK. v. a. [from the noun.] To enclose as in a park.

How are we park'd, and bounded in a pale?

A little herd of England's timorous deer,

Mas'd with a yellow kennel of French deer. Shakspeare.

PARKER. n. f. [from park.] A park-keeper. Ainsworth.

PARKLEAVES. n. f. An herb. Ainsworth.

PARLE. n. f. [from parler, Fr.] Conversation; talk; oral treaty; oral discussion of any thing.

Of all the gentlemen,

That every day with parle encounter me,

On thy opinion, which is worthiest love? Shakspeare.

Our trumpet call'd you to this general parle. Shakspeare.

The bishop, by a parle, is, with a show

Of combination, cunningly betray'd. Daniel.

Why meet we thus, like wrangling advocates,

To urge the justice of our cause with words?

I hate this parle; 'tis tame: if we must meet,

Give me my arms. Rowe.

To PARLEY. v. n. [from parler, French.]

To treat by word of mouth; to talk;

to discuss any thing orally. It is much used in war for a meeting of enemies to talk.

A Turk desired the captain to send some, with whom they might more conveniently parley. Kneller.

He parleys with her a while, as imagining

the would advise him to proceed. Broom.

PARLEY. n. f. [from the verb.] Oral treaty; talk; conference; discussion by word of mouth.

Seek rather by parley to recover them, than by the sword. Schlegel.

Well, by my will, we shall at air no parley;

A rotten case abides no standing. Shakspeare.

Summon a parley, we will talk with him. Shakspeare.

Let us resolve never to have any parley with our lust, but to make some considerable progress in our repentance. Calamy.

Parley and holding intelligence with guilt in the most trivial things, he pronounced as treason to ourselves, as well as unto God. Fell.

No gentle means could be essay'd;

Thus beyond parley when the piece was laid. Dryden.

Force never yet a generous heart did gain;

We yield on parley, but are storm'd in vain. Dryden.

Yet when some better suited youth

Shall with his am'rous parley move thee,

Reflect one moment on his truth,

Who, dying thus, perishes to love thee. Prior.

PARLIAMENT. n. f. [from parliamentum, low

Latin; parlement, Fr.] In England, is the assembly of the king and three estates of the realm; namely, the lords spiritual,

the lords temporal, and commons, for the debating of matters touching the commonwealth, especially the making and correcting of laws; which assembly or court is, of all others, the highest, and of greatest authority. Cowell.

P A R

The king is tied to London,

To call a present court of parliament. Shakspeare.

Far be the thought of this from Henry's heart,

To make a shambles of the parliament house. Shakspeare.

The true use of parliaments is very excellent;

and he often called, and continued as long as is necessary. Bacon.

I thought the right way of parliaments the most safe for my crown, as best pleasing to my people. King Charles.

These are mob readers: if Virgil and Martial stood for parliament men, we know who would carry it. Dryden.

PARLIAMENTARY. adj. [from parliament.]

Enacted by parliament; pertaining to parliament.

To the three first titles of the two houses, or lines, and conquest, were added two more; the authorities parliamentary and papal. Bacon.

Many things, that obtain as common law, had their original by parliamentary acts or constitutions, made in writings by the king, lords, and commons. Hale.

Credit to run ten millions in debt, without parliamentary security, I think to be dangerous and illegal. Swift.

PARLOUR. n. f. [parloir, Fr. parlatorio, Italian.]

1. A room in monasteries, where the religious meet and converse.

2. A room in houses on the first floor, elegantly furnished for reception or entertainment.

Can we judge it a thing seemly for a man to go about the building of an house to the God of heaven, with no other appearance than if his end were to rear up a kitchen or a parlour for his own use? Hooker.

Back again fair Alma led them right,

And soon into a goodly parlour brought. Spenser.

It would be infinitely more shameful, in the dress of the kitchen, to receive the entertainments of the parlour. South.

Root and holes were like a parlour made

A soft recess, and a cool summer shade. Dryden.

The first, to give my verse if too diffuse,

Perform'd the kitchen's and the parlour's use;

The second, better bolted and immur'd,

From wolves his out-door family secur'd. Harte.

PARLOURS. adj. [This might seem to come from parler, Fr. to speak; but Junius derives it, I think rightly, from pe- rilous, in which it answers to the Latin improbus.] Keen; sprightly; waggish.

Midas durst communicate

To none but to his wife his ears of state;

One must be trusted, and he thought her fit,

A prudent, and a parlous wit. Dryden.

PARLOUSNESS. n. f. [from parlous.]

Quickness; keenness of temper.

PARMACITY. n. f. Corruptedly for pharmacit. Ainsworth.

PARNEL. n. f. [The diminutive of patron-

ella.] A punk; a slut. Obsolete.

Skinner.

PAROCHIAL. adj. [parochialis, from paro- chia, low Lat.] Belonging to a parish.

The married state of parochial pastors hath given them the opportunity of setting a more exact and universal pattern of holy living, to the people committed to their charge. Atterbury.

PARODY. n. f. [parodie, Fr. parodia.]

A kind of writing, in which the words of an author or his thoughts are taken,

and by a slight change adapted to some new purpose.

The imitations of the ancients are added together with some of the parodies and allusions to the most excellent of the moderns. Pope.

To PARODY. v. a. [parodier, French; from parody.] To copy by way of parody.

P A R

I have translated, or rather parodied, a poem of Horace, in which I introduce you advising me. Pope.

PAROLE. n. f. [parole, Fr.] Word given as an assurance; promise given by a prisoner not to go away.

Love's votaries enthrall each other's soul,

Till both of them live but upon parole. Cleveland.

Be very tender of your honour, and not fall in love; because I have a scruple whether you can keep your parole, if you become a prisoner to the bed. Swift.

PARONOMASIA. n. f. [παρονομασία.] A rhetorical figure, in which, by the change of a letter or syllable, several things are alluded to. It is called in Latin, agno- minatio. Diel.

PARONYCHIA. n. f. [παρωνυχία; parony- chie, Fr.] A preternatural swelling or fore under the root of the nail in one's finger; a felon; a whitlow. Diel.

PARONYMOUS. adj. [παρωνυμος.] Resembling another word.

Show your critical learning in the etymology of terms, the synonymous and the paronymous or kin-ded names. Watts.

PARROQUET. n. f. [parroquet, or perroquet, Fr.] A small species of parrot.

The great, red and blue, are parrots; the middle most, called popinjays; and the lesser, parro- quets: in all above twenty sorts. Greaves.

I would not give my parroquet

For all the doves that ever flew. Prior.

PAROTID. [parotide, Fr. παροτις, παρ

and ωτα.] Salivary: so named because near the ears.

Beasts and birds, having one common use of spittle, are furnished with the parotid glands, which help to supply the mouth with it. Greaves.

PAROTIS. n. f. [παροτις.] A tumour in the glandules behind and about the ears, generally called the emunctories of the brain; though, indeed, they are the external fountains of the saliva of the mouth. Whistman.

PAROXYSM. n. f. [παροξυσμός; paroxysme, Fr.] A fit; periodical exacerbation of a disease.

I fancied to myself a kind of ease, in the change of the paroxysm. Dryden.

Amorous girls, through the fury of an hysterick paroxysm, are call'd into a trance for an hour. Harvey.

The greater distance of time there is between the paroxysms, the fever is less dangerous, but more obstinate. Arbuthnot.

PARRICIDE. n. f. [parricide, Fr. parricida, Lat. n.]

1. One who destroys his father.

I told him the revenging gods

'Gainst parricides did all their thunder bend;

Spoke with how manifold and strong a bond

The child was bound to th' father. Shakspeare.

2. One who destroys or invades any to whom he owes particular reverence, as his country or patron.

3. [parricide, Fr. parricidium, Lat.] The murder of a father; murder of one to whom reverence is due.

Although he were a prince in military virtue approved, and likewise a good law-maker; yet his cruelty and parricide weighed down his virtues. Bacon.

Morat was always bloody, now he's safe;

And has so far in usurpation gone,

He will by parricide secure the throne. Dryden.

PARRICIDAL. } adj. [from parricide

PARRICIDIOUS. } Lat.] Relating to parricide; committing parricide.

He is now paid in his own way, the parricidal animal, and punishment of murderers is upon his door. Dryden.

P A R

PARROT. n. f. [perroquet, Fr.] A party-coloured bird of the species of the hooked bill, remarkable for the exact imitation of the human voice. See PARROQUET.

Some will evermore peep through their eyes,
And laugh like parrots at a bag-piper. Shakespeare.

Who taught the parrot human notes to try?

'Twas witty want, hence hunger to appease. Dryden.

TO PARRY. v. n. [parer, Fr.] To put by thrusts; to fence.

A man of courage, who cannot fence, and will put all upon one thrust, and not stand parrying, has the odds against a moderate fencer. Locke.

I could

By dint of logic make thee mute;

With learned skill, now push, now parry. Prior.

From Dari to Pocardio vary.

TO PARSE. v. a. [from pars, Latin.] To resolve a sentence into the elements or parts of speech. It is a word only used in grammar schools.

Let him confound the letter into English, and parse it over perfectly. Apham.

Let scholars reduce the words to their original, to the first case of nouns, or first tense of verbs, and give no account of their formations and changes, their syntax and dependencies, which is called parving. Webb.

PARSIMONIOUS. adj. [from parimony.] Covetous; frugal; sparing. It is sometimes of a good, sometimes of a bad sense.

A prodigal king is nearer a tyrant, than a parsimonious, for sure at home draweth not his contemplations abroad, but want supplieth itself of what is next. Bacon.

Extraordinary funds for one campaign may spare us the expense of many years, whereas a long parsimonious war will drain us of more men and money. Addison.

Parsimonious are and rigid wisdom. Rice.

PARSIMONIOUSLY. adv. [from parimony.] Covetously; frugally; sparingly.

Our ancestors acted parimonyously, because they only spent their own treasure for the good of their posterity; whereas we squandered away the treasures of our posterity. Swift.

PARSIMONIOUSNESS. n. f. [from parimony.] A disposition to spare and save.

PARSIMONY. n. f. [parimony, Latin.] Frugality; covetousness; niggardiness; saving temper.

The ways to enrich are many parimony is one of the best, and yet is not innocent; for it withholdeth men from works of liberality. Bacon.

Their people, by their extreme parimony, soon grow into wealth from the smallest beginnings. Sw. ft.

PARSLEY. n. f. [persil, Fr. apium, Latin; peril, Welsh.] An herb.

A wench married in the afternoon, as she went to the garden for parsley to stuff a rabbit. Shakespeare.

Green herbs of parsley near the river grow. Dryden.

Sempronius dug Titus out of the parsley-bed, as they use to tell children, and thereby became his mother. Locke.

PARSNIP. n. f. [parsinaca, Lat.] A plant. November is drawn in a garnish of changeable green, and bunches of parsnips and turneps in his right hand. Pecham.

Abbot was preferred by king James to the bishoprick of Coventry and Litchfield, before he had been parson, vicar, or curate of any parish church. Clarendon.

2. A clergyman.

Sometimes comes the with a tithe pig's tail, Ticking the parson as he lies asleep; Then dreams he of another benefice. Shakespeare.

P A R

3. It is applied to the teachers of the presbyterians.

PERSONAGE. n. f. [from parson.] The benefice of a parish; a rectory.

I have given him the personage of the parish. Addison.

PART. n. f. [pars, Lat.]

1. Something less than the whole; a portion; a quantity taken from a larger quantity.

Helen's cheeks, but not her heart, Shakespeare.

Atalanta's better part Bacon.

The people stood at the nether part of the mount. Ezodus.

This law wanted not parts of prudent and deep foresight; for it took away occasion to pry into the king's tale. Bacon.

The citizens were for the most part slain or taken. Knolles.

Henry had divided

The person of himself into four parts. Daniel.

These conclude that to happen often, which happeneth but sometimes, that never, which happeneth but seldom; and that always, which happeneth for the most part. Brown.

Besides his abilities as a soldier, which were eminent, he had very great parts of breeding, being a very great scholar in the political parts of learning. Clarendon.

When your judgment shall grow stronger, it will be necessary to examine, part by part, those works which have given reputation to the masters. Dryden.

Of heavenly part, and part of earthly blood; *

A mortal woman mixing with a god. Dryden.

Our ideas of extension and number, do they not contain a secret relation of the parts? Locke.

2. Member.

He fully possessed the revelation he had received from God; all the parts were formed, in his mind, into one harmonious body. Locke.

3. Particular; distinct species.

Eutopia brings them up to all kinds of labour that are proper for women, as sowing, knitting, spinning, and all other parts of housewifery. Law.

4. Ingredient in a mingled mass.

Many irregular and degenerate parts, by the defective economy of nature, continue complicated with the blood. Blackmore.

5. That which, in division, falls to each.

adventure, and leave it in confusion. Raleigh.
His glorious end was a patch'd work of fate,
Ill sort'd with a soft effeminate life. Dryden.
There is a visible symmetry in a human body, assigns an intrinsic evidence, that it was not formed successively and patch'd up by piece-meal. Hentley.
Enlarging an author's sense, and building fancies of our own upon his foundation, we may call paraphrasing; but more properly changing, adding, patching, piecing. Felton.
PATCH. n. f. [pazzo, Italian.]
1. A piece sewed on to cover a hole.
Patches set upon a little breach,
Discredit more in hiding of the flaw,
Than did the flaw before it was so patch'd. Shaksp.
If the shoe be ript, or patches put;
He's wounded! see the plaster on his foot. Dryd.
2. A piece inserted in mosaic or variegated work.
They suffer their minds to appear in a pye-bald livery of coarse patches and borrowed shreds, such as the common opinion of those they converse with clothe them in. Locke.
3. A small spot of black silk put on the face.
How! Providence! and yet a Scottish crew!
Then madam Nature wears black patches too. Clay.
If to every common funeral,
By your eyes martyr'd, such grace were allow'd,
Your face would wear not patches, but a cloud. Suckling.
They were patched differently, and cast hostile glances upon one another, and their patches were placed in different situations as party signals to distinguish friends from foes. Addison.
This the morning omens seem'd to tell;
Thrice from my trembling hand the patch-box fell. Pope.
4. A small particle; a parcel of land.
We go to gain a little patch of ground,
That hinders it no profit but the name. Shaksp.
5. A paltry fellow. Obsolete.
What a py'd munny's this? thou scurvy patch!
Shakspere.
PATCHER. n. f. [from patch.] One that patches; a botcher.
PATCHERY. n. f. [from patch.] Botchery;
bungling work; forgery. Not in use.
You hear him cogg, see him dissemble,
Know his gross patchery, love him, and feed him,
Yet remain assur'd that he's a made-up-villain. Shakspere.
PATCHWORK. n. f. [patch and work.]
Work made by sewing small pieces of different colours interchangeably together.
When my cloaths were finished, they looked like patch-work, only mine were all of a colour. Swift.
Whoever only reads to transcribe shining remarks, without entering into the genius and spirit of the author, will be apt to be misled out of the regular way of thinking; and all the product of all this will be found a manifest incoherent piece of patchwork. Swift.
Foreign her air, her robe's discordant pride
In patchwork flutt'ring. Pope.
To patch-work is a'd quotations are ally'd,
Both strive to make our poverty our pride. Young.
PATE. n. f. [This is derived by Shinner from ête, Fr.] The head. Now commonly used in contempt or ridicule; but anciently in serious language.
Senseless man, that himself duth hate,
To love another;
Here take thy lover's token on thy pate. Spenser.
Behold the despatch,
By custom and covetous pates,
By gaps and opening of gates. Tupper.

P A T

He is a traitor, let him to the tower,
And crop away that fustian pate of his. Shaksp.
Steal by line and level is an excellent pate of pate. Shakspere.
That thy devil.
That broker that still breaks the pate of faith,
That daily break vow. Shakspere.
Who dares
Say this man is a flatterer? The learned pate Ducks to the golden fool. Shakspere.
Thank your gentler fate,
That, for a bruise'd or broken pate,
Has freed you from those knobs that grow
Much harder on the married brow. Hudibras.
If only scorn attends men for asserting the church's dignity, many will rather chuse to neglect their duty, than to get a broken pate in the church's service. South.
If any young novice happens into the neighbourhood of flatterers, presently they are plying his full purse and empty pate with addresses suitable to his vanity. South.

father; pertaining to a father.
I disclaim all my paternal care,
Propinquity and property of blood,
And as a stranger to my heart and me
Hold thee. Shakspere.
Grace signifies the paternal favour of God to his elect children. Hammond.
Admonitions fraternal or paternal of his fellow christians or governors of the church. Hammond.
They spend their days in joy unblam'd; and dwell
Long time in peace, by families and tribes,
Under paternal rule. Milton.
2. Hereditary; received in succession from one's father.
Men plough with oars of their own
Their small paternal fold of care. Dryden.

P A T

He held his paternal estate from the bounty of the conqueror. Dryden.
Retreat betimes
To thy paternal tent, the Sabine field,
Where the great Cato toil'd with his own hands. Addison.
PATER-NITY. n. f. [from paternus, Latin; paternité, French.] Fathership; the relation of a father.
The world, while it had scarcity of people, underwent no other dominion than paternity and eldership. Raleigh.
A young heir, kept short by his father, might be known by his countenance; in this case, the paternity and filiation leave very sensible impressions.
Arbuthnot.
This origination in the divine paternity, as bisshop Pearson speaks, hath antiently been looked upon as the assertion of the unity. Waterland.
PATH. n. f. [paθ, Saxon.] Way; road; track. In conversation it is used of a narrow way to be pulled on foot; but in solemn language means any passage.
For darkness, where is the place thereof, that thou shouldest know the paths to the house thereof. Job.
On the glad earth the golden age renew,
And thy great father's path to heav'n pursue. Dryd.
The dewy paths of meadows we will tread. Dryd.
There is but one road by which to climb up, and they have a very severe law against any that enters the town by another path, lest any new one should be worn on the mountain. Addison.
PATHEMICAL. } adj. [παθητικός; pathe- PATHEMICK. } tique, Fr.] Affecting the passions; passionate; moving.
His page that handul of wit;
'Tis most pathemical. Shakspere.
How pathemick is that expostulation of Job, when,
for the trial of his patience, he was made to look upon himself in this deplorable condition. Speator.
Tully considered the dispositions of a sincere and less mercurial nation, by dwelling on the pathemick part. Swift.
While thus pathemick to the prince he spoke,
From the brave youth the streaming passion broke. Pope.
PATHEMICALLY. adv. [from pathemical.]
In such a manner as may strike the passions.
These reasons, so pathemically urged and so admirably raised by the protopopos of nature, speaking to her children with so much authority, deterre the pains I have taken. Dryden.
PATHEMICALNESS. n. f. [from pathemical.] Quality of being pathemick; quality of moving the passions.
PATHLESS. adj. [from path.] Untrodden;
not marked with paths.
Ask thou the citizens of pathless woods;
What cut the air with wings, what swim in floods? Sandys.
Lake one that hath been led astray,
Through the heav'n's wide pathless way. Milton.
In fortune's empire blindly thus we go,
And wander after pathless destiny,
Whole dark resorts since prudence cannot know,
In vain it would provide. Dryden.
Though mists obscure the wings her tedious way,
Now wanders dazzled with too bright a day;
And from the summit of a pathless coast
Sees infinite, and in that light is lost. Prior.
PATHOGNOMONICK. adj. [παθονομονικός, πάθος and νόμος.] Such signs of a disease as are inseparable, designing the essence or real nature of the disease; not symptomatically. Quincy.

They open'd camps deform'd by civil fight. Prior.

PATIENT. n. f. [patient, French.]

1. That which receives impressions from external agents.

Malice is a passion to impetuous and precipitate, that is often involves the agent and the patient. Government of the Tongue.

To proper patients he kind agents brings,
In various leagu'd bands disagreeing things. Croech.

Action and passion are modes which belong to substances: when a smith with a hammer strikes a piece of iron, the hammer and the smith are both agents or subjects of action; the one supreme, and the other subordinate: the iron is the patient or the subject of passion, in a philosophical sense, because it receives the operation of the agent. Watts.

2. A person diseased. It is commonly used of the relation between the sick and the physician.

You deal with me like a physician, that seeing his patient in a pestilent fever, should chide instead of administering help, and bid him be sick no more. Sidney.

Through ignorance of the disease, through unreasonableness of the time, instead of good he worketh hurt, and out of one evil throweth the patient into many miseries. Spenser.

A physician uses various methods for the recovery of sick persons; and though all of them are disagreeable, his patients are never angry. Addison.

3. It is sometimes, but rarely, used absolutely for a sick person.

Nor will the raging fever's fire abate
With golden canopies and beds of state;
But the poor patient will as soon be found
On the hard mattress, or the mother ground. Dryd.

It is wonderful to observe, how inapprehensive these patients are of their disease, and backward to believe their case is dangerous. Blackmore.

TO PATIENT. v. a. [patienter, Fr.] To compose one's self; to behave with patience. Obsolete.

Patient yourself, madam, and pardon me. Shaks.

Whether the minds of men have naturally imprinted on them the ideas of extension and number, I leave to those who are the patrons of innate principles. Locke.

4. One who has donation of ecclesiastical preferment.

Far more the patrons than the clerk's inflame,
Patrons of sense afraid, but not of vice,
Or sworn with pride, or sunk in avarice. Wesley.

PATRONAGE. n. f. [from patron.]

1. Support; protection.

Lady, most worthy of all duty, how falls it out, that you, in whom all virtue shines, will take the patronage of fortune, the only rebellious hand-maid against virtue? Sidney.

Hero's patronage, and here our heart desires,
What breaks its bonds, what draws the cloister's ties,
Shows what rewards our services may gain,
And how too often we may court in vain. Creech.

2. Guardianship of saints.

From certain passages of the poets, several ships made choice of some god or other for their guardians, as among the Roman catholics every vessel is recommended to the patronage of some particular saint. Addison.

3. Donation of a benefice; right of conferring a benefice.

To PATRONAGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

By such as wander through the forest walks. Thomf.

PATTERN. n. f. [patron, French; patroon, Dutch.]

1. The original proposed to imitation; the archetype; that which is to be copied;
an exemplar.

As though your desire were, that the churches of old should be patterned for us to follow, and even glassed wherein we might see the practice of that which by you is gathered out of scripture. Hooker.

I will be the pattern of all patience;

I will say nothing. Shaksp.

A pattern to all princes living with her,

And all that shall succeed. Shaksp.

The example and pattern of the church of Rome.

Clarendon.

Loft not the honour you have early won,

But stand the diamond's pattern of a son. Dryden.

Measure the excellency of a virtuous mind;
not as it is the copy, but the pattern of regal power. Greiv.

Patterns to rule by are to be sought for out of good, not loose reigns.

This pattern should be our guide, in our present state of pilgrimage. Davenant.

Christianity commands us to act after a nobler pattern than the virtues even of the most perfect men. Atterbury.

Take pattern by our sister star,

Delude at once and bless our sight;

When you are from, be seen from far,

And cheeky chide to shine by night. Swift.

chick of a peacock.

Does the fuvelling peachick think to make a cuckold of me? Southern.

PEACOCK. n. f. [papa, Sax. pavo, Latin.
Of this word the etymology is not known: perhaps it is peuk cock, from the tuft of feathers on its head; the peak of women being an ancient ornament: if it be not rather a corruption of beaucoq, Fr.
from the more striking lustre of its spangled train.] A fowl eminent for the beauty of its feathers, and particularly of its tail.

Let frank Talbot triumph for a while;
And live a peacock, sweep along his tail. Shaksp.
The birds that are hardest to be drawn, are the tame birds, as cock, turkey-cock and peacock.

thunder, cannon, loud instruments.

They were saluted by the way, with a fair peal of artillery from the tower. Hayward.

The breath of faith cannot be so highly exalted,
as in that it shall be the lust peal to call the judgments of God upon men. Bacon.

Woods of Oranges will swell into the sea perhaps twenty miles; but what is that, since a peal of ordnance will do as much, which moveth in a small compass? Bacon.

A peal shall rouse their sleep;
Then all thy faints assembled, thou shalt judge
Bed men and angels. Milton.

I myself,
Vanquish'd with a peal of words, O weakness!
Gave up my fort of silence to a woman. Milton.

VOL. II.

From the Moore camp the noise grows louder still;

Peals of shouts that rend the heav'ns. Dryden.
Oh! for a peal of thunder that would make Earth, sea, and air, and heaven and Cato tremble!

2. It is once used by Shakespeare for a low dull noise, but improperly.

Ere to black Ilecus's summons
The shard-born beetle with his drowsy hums,
Hath rung night's yawning peal, there shall be done
A deed of dreadful note. Macbeth.

To PEAL. v. n. [from the noun.] To play solemnly and loud.

Let the pealing organ blow,
To the full-voiced quire below,
In service high and anthems clear,
As may, with sweetness through mine ear,
Dissolve me into ecstasies.

And bring all heav'n before mine eyes. Milton.
The pealing organ, and the pealing choir;
And the last words, that dust to dust convey'd.

3. To peal. v. a.

PEARL. n. f. [perle, Fr. perla, Spanish; supposed by Salmafus to come from spherula, Lat.]

1. Pearls, though esteemed of the number of gems by our jewellers, are but a diftemper in the creature that produces them: the fish in which pearls are most frequently found is the East Indian berber or pearl oyster: others are found to produce pearls; as the common oyster, the mussel, and various other kinds; but the Indian pearls are superior to all:
some pearls have been known of the size of a pigeon's egg; as they increase in size, they are less frequent and more valued: the true shape of the pearl is a perfect round; but some of a considerable size are of the shape of a pear, and serve for ear-rings. Hill.

A pearl pulep was made of a distilled milk.
R. J. J. J.

Flow's purified, blue and white,
Like sapphires, pearls, in rich embroidery

I had rather coin my heart, than wring
From the hard hands of peasants their vile trade. Shakespeare.

The poor peasants in the Alpine countries, diversified themselves in the fields, and after their labour, would be lively and brisk. Brown.

'Tis difficult for us, who are bred up with the same intimacies about us with which we were born, to raise our thoughts and imaginations to those intellectual perfections that attended our nature in the time of innocence, as it is for a peasant bred up in the obscurity of a cottage, to buncy in his mind the union splendours of a court. South.

The citizens bring two thousand men, with which they could make head against twelve thousand peasants. Addison.

PEASANTRY, n. f. Peasants; rusticks; country people.

How many then shall cover, that stand bare?
How much low peasantry would then be gleaned
From the true seed of honour? how much honour
Pickt from the chaff? Shakespeare.

The peasantry in France under a much heavier pressure of want and poverty than the day-labourers of England of the reformed religion, understood it much better than those of a higher condition among us. Lock.

little of the conversation of men in it, that I shall pass it over. Addison.

In learning let a nymph delight,

The pedant gets a mistress by't. Swift.

Pursuit of fame with pedants fills our schools,

And into coxcombs burndishes our souls. Young.

PEDANTICAL. } adj. [from pedantescus, Fr. from

PEDANTICK. } pedant.] Awkwardly

ostentatious of learning.

Mr. Cheeke had eloquence in the Latin and Greek tongues; but for other influences pedantick enough. Hayward.

When we see any thing in an old fytout that looks forced and pedantick, we ought to consider how it appeared in the time the poet writ. Addison.

The obituary is brought over them by ignorance and age, made yet more obituary by their pedantick elucidations. Pelton.

A spirit of contradiction is so pedantick, and hateful, that a man should watch against every instance of it. Harris.

We now believe the Copernican system; yet we shall still use the popular terms of sun rise and setting, and not introduce a new pedantick description of them from the motion of the earth. Beattie.

PEDANTICALLY. adv. [from pedantical.]

times makes the arch of a circle. Diet.

PEDLER. n. f. [from petty dealer]; a contraction produced by frequent use. One who travels the country with small commodities.

All as a poor pedler he did wend,
Bearing a bundle of trifles at his back;
As bells and babies and glasses in his pack. Spenser.

If you did but hear the pedler at the door, you would never dare again utter a labor and pipe.
Shakspeare.

He is wit's pedler, and retails his wares
At wakes and wassals, meetings, markets, fairs.
Shakspeare.

Had fly Ulysses at the back
Of Ixion brought thee in petty's pack. Cleveland.

A narrow education may beget among some of the clergy in possession such contempt for all innovators, as merchants have for pedlers. Swift.

Both ill to the master and worse to some ground.

Tupper.

As 'tis a peeler of land, sow it upon lands the time rank. Mortimer.

To PEEP. v. n. [This word has no etymology, except that of Skinner, who derides it from opheffen, Dutch, to lift up;

and of Cajubon, who derives it from inwitsen, a spy; perhaps it may come from pip, pipio, Latin, to cry as young birds: when the chickens first broke the shell and cried, they were said to begin to pip or peep; and the word that expressed the act of crying, was by mistake applied to the act of appearing that was at the same time: this is offered till something better may be found.]

1. To make the first appearance.

She her gay painted plumes disordered,

Seeing at last herself from danger rid,

Peeps forth and soon renews her native pride. Spens.

Your youth

And the true blood, which peeps forth fairly through it,

Do plainly give you out an unfauld shepherd Shaksp.

England and France might through their unity,

Dread him some prejudice, for from this tongue

Peep'd harm'd that menac'd him. Shakspere.

I can see his pride

Peep through each part of him. Shakspere.

The two rous maiden-blossoms on each bough

Peep forth from the first blushes; so that now

A thousand ruddy hopes stud'd in each bud,

And flatter'd every greedy eye that stood. Crashaw.

With words not hers, and more than human sound,

She makes th' obedient ghosts peep trembling through the ground. Roscommon.

Earth, but not at once, her visage rears,

And peeps upon the seas from upper grounds. Dryd.

Fair as the face of nature did appear,

When flowers first peep'd, and trees did blossoms beast.

And winter had not yet deform'd th' inverted year.

Dryden.

Printing and letters had just peep'd abroad in the world; and the reformers of learning wrote very eagerly against one another. Atterbury.

Though but the very white end of the sprout peep out in the outward part of the couch, break it open,

you will find the sprout of a greater largeness.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

So pleas'd at first the towering Alps we try,

And the first clouds and mountains seem the last;

But those attain'd, we tremble to survey

The growing labours of the lengthen'd way;

Th' increasing prospect tires our waning eyes,

Hills peep o'er hills, and Alps on Alps arise. Pope.

Most souls but peep out once an age.

Dull fallen prisoners in the body's cage. Pope.

2. To look slyly, closely; or curiously; to look through any crevice.

Who is the same, which at my window peeps.

Spenser.

Come thick night!

That my keen knife see not the wound it makes;

Nor heav'n peep through the blanket of the dark;

To cry hold. Shakspere's Macbeth.

Nature hath fram'd strange fellows in her time;

Some that will evermore peep through their eyes,

And laugh like parrots at a bag-piper. Shakspere.

A fool will peep in at the door. Verdijastus.

The trembling leaves through which he play'd,

Dappling the walk with light and shade,

Like lattice windows give the spy

Room but to peep with half an eye. Cleveland.

All doors are shut, no fear and peeps abroad,

While others outward went on quick dispatch. Dryd.

The spring flames peep in, and saw from far

The awful accents of the sacred quire;

But since it was prop and by evil war,

Heav'n thought it fit to have it pug'd by fire.

Dryden.

From each tree

The feather'd people look down to peep on me.

Dryden.

Those remade and vast bodies were formed not merely to be peep'd at through an optick glass.

 his own hand. Hayward.
 The precepts pennd, or preached by the holy apostles, were as divine and as perpetual in respect of obligation. White.
 The digesting my thoughts into order, and the setting them down in writing was necessary; for without such strict examination, as the penning them forth, they would have been disordered and running on. Dryden.
 Almost condemn'd, he mov'd the judges thus.
 Hear, but instead of me, my Oedipus;
 'The judges hearing with applause, at the end
 I read him, and had, no tool such lines had pen'd.
Dryden.
 Gentlemen should extempore, or after a little meditation, speak to some subject without penning of any thing. Locke.
 Should I publish the proofs that are to well pennd, they would do honour to the persons who write them. Addison.
 Twenty fools I never saw Come with petitions truly pen'd. St. John.
 Desiring I should stand their friend. St. John.
PENAL. adj. [penal, Fr. from puna, Lat.]
 1. Denouncing punishment; exacting punishment.

PENNYWEIGHT, n. f. [penny and weight.]

A weight containing twenty-four grains

trov weight.

The Seville piece of eight is $\frac{1}{16}$ pennyweight in the pound worse than the English standard, weighs fourteen pennyweight, contains thirteen penny-weight, twenty-one grains and fifteen nates, of which there are twenty in the grain of sterling silver, and in value forty-three English pence and eleven hundredths of a penny. Arlinnot.

PENNYWISE, adj. [penny and wife.] Saving of small sums at the hazard of larger;

niggardly on improper occasions.

Do not pennywise; wiches have wings and fly away of themselves. Bacon.

PENNYWORTH, n. f. [penny and worth.]

1. As much as is bought for a penny.

2. Any purchase; any thing bought or sold for money.

As for corn it is nothing natural, save only for barley and oats, and some places for rye, and therefore the larger pennyworths may be allowed to them. Spenser.

Pirates may make cheap pennyworths of their pillage.

And purchas'd friends. Shakespeare.

I say nothing to him, for he hath neither Latin,

French nor Italian, and you may come into court, and swear that I have a poor pennyworth of the English. Shakespeare.

Lucian affirms, that the souls of virtuous after their death are translated into the bodies of asses, and there remain certain days for poor men to take their pennyworths out of their bones and hides by cudgel and spur. Trachon.

Though in purchases of church lands men have usually the cheapest pennyworths, yet they have not always the best bargains. Scott.

3. Something advantageously bought; a purchase got for less than it is worth.

For time he pray'd, but let the event declare

He had no mighty pennyworth of his prayer. Dryden.

4. A small quantity.

My friendship I distribute in pennyworths to those about me and who dispute me I am. Swift.

PENSILE, adj. [pensilis, Lat.]

1. Hanging; suspended.

Two repudiations; the one manifest and local, as of the ball when it is peggie, the other, secret of the minute parts. Bacon.

This ethereal space,

Yielding to earth and sea the middle place,

Anxious I ask you, how the peggie ball

Should never strive to rise, nor never fear to fall. Prior.

2. Supported above the ground.

The marble brought, erects the famous dome,

Or forms the pillars long-extended rows,

On which the planted grove and people garden grows. Prior.

PEN

PENALTY, n. f. [from penale.] The state of hanging.

PENSION, n. f. [pension, Fr.] An allowance made to any one without an equivalent. In England it is generally understood to mean pay given to a state hiring for treason to his country.

A charity bellowed on the education of her young subjects has more merit than a thousand pensions to those of a higher fortune. Addison.

He has lived with the great without flattery, and been a friend to men in power without pensions. Pope.

Chreepes, for airy pensions of renown,

Devotes his service to the state, and crown. Young.

To PENSION, v. a. [from the noun.] To support by an arbitrary allowance.

One might expect to see medals of France in the highest perfection, when there is a society pensioned and set apart for the designing of them. Addison.

The herb William, and the martyr Charles,

One knighted Blackmore, and one pension'd Quarles. Pope.

PENSIONARY, adj. [pensionnaire, French.]

Maintained by pensions.

Scorn his household policies,

His silly plots and pensionary spies. Donne.

They were devoted by pensionary obligations to the olive. Howell.

PENSIONER, n. f. [from pension.]

1. One who is supported by an allowance paid at the will of another, a dependant.

Prices of things necessary for sustentation, grew excessive to the hurt of pensioners, soldiers, and all lured servants. Candlen.

Hovering dreams,

The sickle pensioners of Morpheus' train. Milton.

Those persons whom he trusted with his greatest secret and greatest business, his charity, seldom had re-ourie to him, but he would make enquiry for new pensioners. Fell.

The rector is maintained by the perquisites of the curate's office, and therefore is a kind of pensioner to him. Collier.

2. A slave of state hired by a stipend to obey his master.

In Britain's senate he a seat obtains,

And one more pensioner St. Stephen gains. Pope.

PENSIVE, adj. [pensif, Fr. pensivo, Italian.]

1. Sorrowfully thoughtful; sorrowful;

mourntully serious; melancholy.

Think it still a good work, which they in their pensive care for the well-beflowing of time account waste. Hooker.

Are you at leisure, holy father?

—My lecture serves me, pensive daughter, now. Shakespeare.

Anxious cares the pensive nymph oppress,

And secret pious labour'd in her breast. Pope.

2. It is generally and properly used of persons; but Prior has applied it to things.

We at the sad approach of death shall know

The truth, which from these pensive numbers flow,

That we pursue false joy, and suffer real woe. Prior.

PENSIVELY, adv. [from pensif.] With melancholy; sorrowfully; with gloomy seriousness.

So fair a lady did I spy,

On Herbs and flowers she walked pensively

And, but yet love the proudly did forsake. Spenser.

PENSIVENESS, n. f. [from pensif.] Melancholy; sorrowfulness; gloomy seriousness.

Concerning the blessings of God, whether they lead unto this life or the life to come, there is great cause why we should delight more in giving thanks than in making requests for them, inasmuch as the one hath pensiveness and fear, the other always joy mixed. Hooker.

Would'st thou unlock the door

To cold despair and glooming pensiveness? Herbert.

PEN

PENT, part. pass. of pen. Shut up.

Cut my knee asunder

That my pent heart may have some scope to beat. Shakespeare.

The son of Clarence have I pent up close. Shakespeare.

makes not unfrequent mention of the angels. Bentley.

PENTECOST, n. f. [pentecostis, pentis

and coste, Fr.]

1. A feast among the Jews.

Pentecost signifies the fiftieth, because this feast was celebrated the fiftieth day after the sixteenth of Nisan, which was the second day of the feast of the passover. The Hebrews call it the feast of weeks because it was kept seven weeks after the passover;

they then offered the first fruits of the wheat harvest, which then was completed: it was instituted to oblige the Israelites to repair to the temple, there to acknowledge the Lord's dominion, and also to render thanks to God for the law he had given them from mount Sinai, on the fiftieth day after their coming out of Egypt. Cabaret.

2. Whitsuntide.

'Tis since the nuptial of Lucretia,

Come pentecost as quickly as it will,

Some five and twenty years. Shakespeare.

PENTECOSTAL, adj. [from pentecost.] Belonging to Whitsuntide.

I have computed sundry collects, made up out of the church collects, with some little variation,

as the collects adventual, quadragesimal, paschal or pentecostal. Sunderlin.

PENTHOUSE, n. f. [pent, from pentis, It and house.] A shed hanging out aloof from the main wall.

P E O

This is the penthouse under which Lorraine desired us to make a stand. Shakespeare.

Sleep shall neither night nor day hang upon his penthouse lid. Shakespeare.

The Turks lurking under the penthouse, laboured with mattocks to dig up the foundation of the wall. Kneller.

Those defensive engines, made by the Romans into the form of penthouses, to cover the assailants from the weapons of the besieged, would be presently batter in pieces with stones and blocks. Wilkins.

My penthouse eye-brows and my shaggy beard Offend your sight; but these are manly signs. Dryden.

The chill rain Drops from some penthouse on her wretched head. Rowe.

PENTICE. n. f. [appentir, Fr. pendice, Italian. It is commonly supposed a corruption of penthouse; but perhaps pentice is the true word.] A sloping roof. Climes that fear the falling and lying of such snow, ought to provide more inclining pentices. Wotton.

PENTILE. n. f. [pent and tile.] A tile formed to cover the sloping part of the roof: they are often called pantiles. Pentiles are thirteen inches long, with a button to hang on the laths, they are hollow and circular. Mason.

He percheth on the same branch thereby,
To weather him and his moist wings to dry. Spenser.

The world is grown to bud,
That wrens make prey, where eagles dare not perch. Shakespeare.

The morning muses perch like birds, and sing
Among his branches. Crahaue.

Let owls keep close within the trees, and not perch upon the upper boughs. Seneca.

They wing'd their flight aloft, then stooping low,
Perch'd on the double tree, that bears the golden bough. Dryden.

Glory, like the dazzling eagle, stood Perch'd on my bever in the Grauc flood;

When fortune's felt my standard trembling bore,
And the pale fates stood frighted on the shore. Lee.

Holds of birds that wing the liquid air,
Perch'd in the boughs, had nightly lodging there. Dryden.

To PERCH. v. a. To place on a perch.

It would be notoriously perceptible, if you could perch yourself as a bird on the top of some high steep. More.

As evening dragon came,
Affailant on the perch'd roosts,
And nests in order rang'd
Of some villatic fowl. Milton.

1. Destruction; ruin; death.

Upon tidings now arrived, importing the meet perdition of the Turkish fleet, every man puts himself in triumph. Shakespeare.

We took ourselves for free men, seeing there was no danger of our utter perdition, and lived most joy-ally; going abroad, and seeing what was to be done. Bacon.

Quick let us part! Perdition's in thy presence,
And horror dwells about thee! Addison.

2. Lofs.

There's no foul lost,
Nay not so much perdition as an hair
Betwixt any creature in the vessel
Thou saw'st sink. Shakespeare.

3. Eternal death.

As life and death, mercy and wrath, are matters of knowledge, all men's salvation and some men's condemnation are things so opposite, that whoever doth affirm the one, must necessarily deny the other. Hooker.

Men once fallen away from undoubted truth, do after wander for ever more in vices unknown, and daily travel towards their eternal perdition. Raleigh.
PERDUE, adv. [This word, which among us is adverbially taken, comes from the killed.] Dogmatical; absolute; such as destroys all further expostulation.

If I entertain
As peremptorie a desire, to level with the plaine
A citie, where they loved to live; stand not betwixt my ire

And what it aims at. Chapman.
As touching the apostle, wherein he was to refo-lute and peremptory, our Lord Jesus Christ made manifest unto him, even by intuitive revelation, wherein there was no possibility of error. Hooker.

He may have fifty exceptions peremptorily against the juries, of which he shall show no cause.

To-morrow he in readiness to go; Spenser.
Excuse it not, for I am peremptory. Shakespeare.
Not death himself

In mortal fury is half so peremptory,
As we to keep this city. Shakespeare.

Though the text and the doctrine run peremptory and absolute, whosoever denies Christ, shall as-surely be denied by him; yet still there is a tacit condition, unless repentance intervene. South.

The more modest confess, that learning was to give us a fuller discovery of our ignorance, and to keep us from being peremptory and dogmatical in our determinations. Cotter.

He would never talk in such a peremptory and discouraging manner, were he not assured that he was able to subdue the most powerful opposition against the doctrine which he taught. Addison.

PERENNIAL, adj. [perennis, Latin.]

PERIHELUM, n. f. [περι and ηλιος; peri- helie, Fr.] That point of a planet's orbit, wherein it is nearest the sun. Harris.
Sir Isaac Newton has made it probable, that the comet, which appeared in 1680, by approaching to the sun in its perihelium, acquired such a degree of heat, as to be 50,000 years a cooling. Shagne.
PERIL, n. f. [peril, Fr. perikel, Dut. peri- culum, Latin.]
1. Danger; hazard; jeopardy.
Dear Pinches, be liberal unto me of those things, which have made you indeed precious to the world,
and now doubt not to tell of your perils. Sidney.
How many perils do mislead
The righteous man to make him daily fall? Spenser.
In the act what perils shall we find,
If either place, or time, or other course,
Cause us to alter th' order now assign'd. Daniel.
The love and pious duty which you pay,
Have per'd the perils of to hard a way. Dryden.
Strong, healthy and young people are more peril
by pestilential fevers, than the weak and old. Arbuth.
2. Denunciation; danger denounced.
I told her,
On your displeasure's peril,
She should not visit you. Shakspere.
PERILOUS, adj. [perileus, Fr. from peril.]
1. Dangerous; hazardous; full of danger.
Alterations in the service of God, for that they impair the credit of religion, are therefore perilous in common-weal, which have no continuance longer than religion hath all reverence done unto it. Hooker.
Her guard is elasticity;
She that has that is clad in complete steel,
And like a quiver'd nymph with arrows kern
May trace huge forests and unharbour'd heaths, Innum'ous hills and sandy perilous wilds. Milton.
Debate propositions to my duteous ear,
What arts can captivate the changeful leer:
Per perilous th' assay, unheard the toil.
I'll elude the precience of a God by guile. Pope.
2. It is used by way of emphasis, or hudi-crous exaggeration of any thing bad.
Thus was th' accomplish'd squire endu'd
With gifts and knowledge perilous to end. Lucubras.

PER

3. Smart; witty. In this sense it is, I think, only applied to children, and probably obtained its signification from the notion, that children eminent for wit do not live; a witty boy was therefore a perilous boy, or a boy in danger. It is vulgarly perilous.
'Tis a perilous boy,
Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable:
He's all the mother's from the top to toe. Shaksp.
PERILOUSLY, adv. [from perilous.] Dangerously.
PERILOUSNESS, n. f. [from perilous.] Dangerousness.
PERIMETER, v. n. [περι and μετρο; peri- metre, Fr.] The compass or sum of all the sides which bound any figure of what kind soever, whether rectilinear or mixed.
By comprehending the glasses still more, the diameter of this ring would increase, and the breadth of its orbit or perimeter decrease, until another new colour emerged in the centre of the last. Newton.
PERIOD, n. f. [periode, Fr. περιοςδος.]
1. A circuit.
2. Time in which any thing is performed, so as to begin again in the same manner.
Tell these, that the sun is fixed in the centre, that the earth with all the planets roll round the sun in their several periods; they cannot admit a sylable of this new doctrine. Watts.
3. A stated number of years; a round of time, at the end of which the things comprised within the calculation shall return to the state in which they were at the beginning.
A cycle or period is an account of years that has a beginning and end, and begins again as often as it ends. Holder.
We stile a lesser space a cycle, and a greater by the name of period, and you may not improperly call the beginning of a large period the epocha thence of. Holder on Time.
4. The end or conclusion.
If my death might make this island happy,
And prove the period of the tyranny,
I would expend it with all willingness;
But mine is made the prologue to their play. Shaksp.
There is nothing to fear (that shall not be brought to light within the compass of our world; whatsoever concerns this sublunary world in the whole extent of its duration, from the chaos to the last period. Burnet's Theory.
What anxious moments pass between
The birth of plots and their last fatal period!
Oh! 'tis a dreadful inter-act of time. Addison.
5. The state at which any thing terminates.
Beauty's empires, like to greater states,
Have certain periods, and sudden fates. Sackling.
Light-containing flames must be set in the sun before they retain light, and the light will appear greater or lesser, until they come to their utmost period. Dagly.
6. Length of duration.
Some experiment would be made how by art to make plants more lasting than the ordinary period;
as to make a stalk of wheat last a whole year. Bacon.
7. A complete sentence from one full stop to another.
Periods are beautiful, when they are not too long: for to they have their through too as in a pique or javelin. Ben Jonson.
Is this the confidence you gave me?
Lemon is safely, not a period.
Shall be unaid for me. Milton.
Syllogism is made use of to discover a fallacy,
cunningly wrapt up in a too short period. Tucke.
For the assistance of memory, the first words of every period in every page may be written in antithetical columns. Watts.
8. A course of events, or series of things memorably terminated: as, the periods of an empire.

PER

From the tongue
The unfinish'd period it is. Thomson's Spring.
To PERIOD. v. a. [from the noun.] To put an end to. A bad word.

Your letter he desires
To those have shut him up, which failing to him, Periods his comfort. Shakespeare's Timon PERIODICAL. adj. [periodique, Fr. from PERIODICK. } period.]

1. Circular; making a circuit; making a revolution.

Was the earth's periodick motion always in the same plane with that of the diurnal, we should miss of those kindly increases of day and night Deham.

Four months perpetually roll round the planet
Jupiter, and are carried along with him in his periodical circuit round the sun. Watts on the Mind.

2. Happening by revolution at some stated time.

Astrological undertakers would raise men out of some stony soil, impregnated with the influence of the stars upon some remarkable and periodical conjunctions. Bentley.

3. Regular; performing some action at stated times.

The confusion of mountains and hollows furnished me with a probable reason for those periodical fountains in Switzerland, which flow only at such particular hours of the day. Addison.

4. Relating to periods or revolutions.

It is implicitly denied by Aristotle in his politics, in that discourse against Plato, who measured the vicissitude and mutation of states by a periodical fatality of number. Brown.

PERIODICALLY. adv. [from periodical.]
At stated periods.

The three tides ought to be understood of the space of the night and day, then there will be a regular flux and reflux thrice in that time every eight hours periodically. Brown.

PERISTEUM. n. f. [περί and στεῖον; periste,
French.]

All the bones are covered with a very sensible membrane, called the peristeum. Cheyne.

PERIPHERY. n. f. [περί and φέρω; peri- phere, Fr.] Circumference.

Neither is this sole vital faculty sufficient to exterminate noxious humours to the periphery or outward parts. Harvey.

To PERIPHRASE. v. a. [periphrasis, Fr.]
To express one word by many; to express by circumlocution.

PERIPHRASTIC. n. f. [περιφραστικός; periphras-
Fr.] Circumlocution; use of many words to express the sense of one; as, for death, we may say, the loss of life.

She contains all blis,

And makes the world but her periphrasis. Cleavel.
They make the gates of Thebes and the mouths of this river a constant periphrasis for this number seven. Brown.

They shew their learning uselessly, and make a long periphrasis on every word of the book they explain. Watts.

The periphrases and circumlocutions, by which Horace expresses the single act of dying, have supplanted succeeding poets with all their manners of phrasing it. Pope.

PERIPHRASTICAL. adj. [from periphrasis.] Circumlocutory; expressing the sense of one word in many.

PERIPNEUMONY. n. f. [περί and πνεύμων;
PERIPNEUMONIA. } peripneumonic, Fr.]

An inflammation of the lungs.
Lungs oft inhibing phlegmatick and melancolick humours, are now and then deprehended ichterous, by distipation of the subtiler parts, and lapidification of the grosser that may be left indurated, through the gross reliques of peripneumonia or inflammation of the lungs. Harvey.

A peripneumony is the last fatal symptom of every disease; for no body dies without a stagnation of the blood in the lungs, which is the total extinction of breath. Arbuthnot.

PER

To PERISH. v. n. [perir, Fr. perco, Lat.]
1. To die; to be destroyed; to be lost; to come to nothing. It seems to have for or with before a cause, and by before an instrument. Locke has by before the cause.

I burn, I pine, I perish,
If I believe not this young modest girl. Shakespeare.
It I have seen any perish for want of clothing—
then, let mine arm fall from my shoulder blade. Joh.
He I cept back his soul from the pit, and his life from perishing by the sword, Joh.
They perish quickly from off the good land.

I perish with hunger.
The sick, when their case comes to be thought desperate, are carried out and laid on the earth to perish without assistance or pity. Locke.
Characters drawn on dust, that the first breath of wind effaces, are altogether as useful as the thoughts of a soul that perish in thinking. Locke.

Exposing their children, and leaving them in the fields to perish by want, has been the practice. Locke.
Still when the lust of tyrant pow'r succeeds,
Some Athens perishes, or some Tully bleeds. Pope.

In the Iliad, the anger of Achilles had caused the death of so many Grecians; and in the Odyssey, the subjects perished through their own fault. Pope.

2. To be in a perpetual state of decay.

Duration, and time which is a part of it, is the idea we have of perishing distance, of which no two parts exist together, but follow in succession; an expansion is the idea of lasting distance, all whose parts exist together. Locke.

3. To be lost eternally.

These, as natural brute beasts made to be destroyed, speak evil of the things they understand not,
and shall utterly perish. 2 Peter.

O fuller me not to perish in my sins? Lord, carest thou not that I perish, who wilt that all should be saved, and that none should perish? Morison.

To PERISH. v. a. To destroy; to decay.
Not in use.

The splitting rocks cow'd in the sinking sands,
And would not dash me with their ragged sides;
Because thy flinty heart more hard than they,
Might in thy palace perish Margaret. Shakespeare.
Rise, prepar'd in black, to mourn thy perish'd lord. Dryden.

He was so reserved, that he would impart his secret to nobody; whereupon this closeness did a little perish his understandings. Collier.

Familiar now with grief your ears refrain,
And in the public weep forget your own,
You weep not for a perish'd lord alone. Pope.

PERISHABLE. adj. [from perish.] Liable to perish; subject to decay; of short duration.

We derogate from his eternal power to ascribe to them the same dominion over our immortal souls, which they have over all bodily substances and perishable natures. Raleigh.

To these purposes nothing can so much contribute as medals of undoubted authority not perishable by time, nor confined to any certain place. Addison.

It is princes greatest present felicity to reign in their subjects hearts; but these are too perishable to preserve their memories, which can only be done by the pens of faithful historians. Swift.

Human nature could not sustain the reflection of having all its schemes and expectations to determine with this frail and perishable composition of flesh and blood. Rogers.

Thrice has he seen the perishable kind
Of men decay. Pope.

PERISHABLENESS. n. f. [from perishable.] Liableness to be destroyed; liableness to decay.

Suppose an island separate from all commerce, but having nothing because of its commonness and perishableness fit to supply the place of money;
what reason could any have to enlarge possessions beyond the use of his family? Locke.

PERISTALTIC. adj. [περιστάλιν; peristal- tique, Fr.]

Peristaltick motion is that vernicular motion of the guts, which is made by the contraction of the spiral fibres, whereby the excrements are press'd downwards and voided. Querc.

PER

The peristaltick motion of the guts, and the continual expression of the fluids, will not suffer the least matter to be applied to one point the least instant. Arbuthnot.

PERISTERION. n. f. The herb vervain. Diet.

PERISTYLE. n. f. [peristyle, Fr.] A circular range of pillars.

The Villa Gordiana had a peristyle of two hundred pillars. Arbuthnot.

PERISTYSTOLE. n. f. [πῆσι and στυλῶν.] The pause or interval between the two motions of the heart or pulse; namely, that of the systole or contraction of the heart, and that of the diastole or dilatation. Diet.

PERITONEUM. n. f. [περιτόναιος; peritone- Fr.] This lies immediately under the muscles of the lower belly, and is a thin soft membrane, which encloses all the bowels contained in the lower belly, covering all the inside of its cavity. Diet.
Wounds penetrating into the belly, are such a reach no farther inward than to the peritoneum. Wijman.

PERJURE. n. f. [perjurus, Lat.] A perjured or sworn perion. Not in use.

Hide thee, thou bloody hand,
Thou perjure, thou simulator of virtue,
Thou art incestuous. Shakespeare.

To PERJURE. v. a. [perjuro, Latin]
To forswear; to taint with perjury. It is used with the reciprocal pronoun; as he perjured himself.

Who should be trusted now, when the right hand
Is perjur'd to the bosom? Shakespeare.

The law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawless and disobedient, for perjured persons. 1 Timothy.

PERJURER. n. f. [from perjure.] One that swears falsely.

The common oath of the Scythians was by the sword and fire; for that they accounted those two special divine powers, which should work vengeance on the perjurers. Spencer.

PERJURY. n. f. [perjurium, Latin.] False oath.

My great father-in-law, renowned Warwick,
Cried aloud—What courage for perjury?
Can this dark monarchy afford false Clarence?
And so he vanish'd. Shakespeare.

PERIWIG. n. f. [péruque, Fr.] Adornment of hair; hair not natural, worn by way of ornament or concealment of baldness.

Her hair is auburn, mine is perfect yellow;
If that be all the difference in his love,
I'll get me such a colour'd periwig. Shakespeare.

It offends me to hear a robustious periwig-pated fellow tear a passion to tatters, to split the ears of the groundlings. Shakespeare.

The sun's Dishevel'd beams and scatter'd fires
Serve but for ladies periwigs and tics
In lovers sonnets. Dante.

Madam Time, be ever bald,
I'll not thy periwig be call'd. Cleaveland.

For valuing of their visages his highness and the marquis bought each a periwig, somewhat to overshadow their foreheads. Hutton.

They used false hair on periwigs,
From her own head Megara takes
A periwig of twisted snakes. Swift.

To PERIWIG. v. a. [from the noun.] To dress in false hair.

Now when the winter's keener breath began
To crystallize the Baltic ocean,
To glaze the lakes, to bridle up the floods,
And periwig with snow the bald-pate wood. Sylvester.

Near the door an entrance gapes,
Crowded round with antic shapes,
Discord periwig'd with snakes,
See the dreadful brides she takes. Swift.

PERIWINKLE. n. f.

1. A small shellfish; a kind of fish shell. This is represented by a lady of a brownish complexion, her hair dishevelled about her shoulders, upon her head a coronet of periwinkle and coral shells. Peacham.

2. [climatis. A plant.]

There are in use, for the prevention of the cramp, hands of green periwinkle tied about the calf of the leg. Bacon.

The common simples with us are comfrey, buple, ladies mantle, and periwinkle. Wicam.

TO PERK. v. n. [from perch, Skinner.] To hold up the head with an affected briskness.

If, after all, you think it a disgrace, That Edward's mistress thus perks it in your face; To see a piece of failing flesh and blood, In all the rest so unpudently good; Faith, let the modest matrons of the town Come here in crowds, and stare the strumpet down. Pope.

TO PERK. v. a. To dress; to prink.

'Tis better to be lowly born, And range with humble livers in content, Than to be perk'd up in a glittering grief, And wear a golden sorrow. Shakespeare.

PERK, adj. Pert; brisk; airy. Obsolete.

My ragged routs Went in the wind, and wag their wriggle tails, Perk as a peacock, but nought avails. Spenser.

PERILOUS, adj. [from perilous.] Dangerous; full of hazard.

A perilous passage lies, Where many maidens haunt, making false melodies. Spenser.

Late he far'd In Phadna's fleet bark over the perilous shard. Spensf.

PERVAGY, n. f. A little Turkish boot. Dick.

PERMANENCE. } n. f. [from permanent.]

PERMANENCY. } Duration; consistency; continuance in the same state; lastingness.

Salt, they say, is the basis of solidity and permanency in compound bodies, without which the other four elements might be variously blended together, but would remain incompact. Boyle.

Shall I dispute whether there be any such material being that hath such a permanence or fix'dness in being? Hale.

From the permanency and immutability of nature hitherto, they argued its permanency and immutability for the future. Burnet.

PERMANENCE IN REST. Such a punctum to our conceptions is almost equivalent to permanency and rest. Bentley.

PERMANENT, adj. [from permanent, French; permanens, Latin.]

Durable; not decaying; unchanged.

If the authority of the maker do prove unchangeableness in the laws which God hath made, then must all laws which he hath made be necessarily for ever permanent, though they be but of circumstance only. Hooker.

That eternal duration should be at once, is utterly inconceivable, and that one permanent instant should be commensurate or rather equal to all successions of ages. More.

Pure and unchang'd, and needing no defence From sin, as did my frailty innocence;

Perpetual mine, with no more sorrow mixt, Integrity stands permanent and fixt. Dryden.

Of long continuance.

Its meaning is, that in these, or such other light cases, which either leave no permanent effect, or only such as may be born without any great prejudice, we should exercise our patience. Kettlewell.

PERMANENTLY, adv. [from permanent.]

Durably; lastingly.

It does, like a compact or confident body, deny to mingle permanently with the contiguous liquor. Boyle.

PERMANENCE, n. f. [from permaneo, Lat.] Continuance.

PER

Although we allow that hares may exchange their sex sometimes, yet not in that vicissitude it is presumed; from female unto male, and from male to female again, and so in a circle without a permanency in either. Brown.

PERMEABLE, adj. [from permeo, Latin.] Such as may be pass'd through.

The pores of a bladder are not easily permeable by air. Boyle.

PERMEANT, adj. [from permeans, Lat.] Passing through.

It entereth not the veins, but taketh leave of the permeant parts at the mouths of the mesericks. Brown.

TO PERMEATE, v. a. [from permeo, Latin.] To pass through.

This heat evaporates and elevates the water of the abyss, pervading not only the fibres, but the very bodies of the strata, permeating the interstices of the sand, or other matter whereof they consist. Woodward.

PERMEATION, n. f. [from permeate.] The act of passing through.

PERMISCIBLE, adj. [from permiscere, Lat.] Such as may be mingled.

PERMISSIBLE, adj. [from permisus, Latin.] What may be permitted.

PERMISSION, n. f. [from permissio, Fr. permisus, Lat.] Allowance; grant of liberty.

With thy permission then, and thus forewarn'd, The willing I go. Milton.

You have given me your permission for this address, and encouraged me by your praiseful and approbation. Dryden.

PERMISSIVE, adj. [from permitto, Lat.]

1. Granting liberty, not favour; not hindering, though not approving. We bid this be done.

When evil deeds have their permissive pass, And not the punishment. Shakespeare.

Hypocrisy, the only evil that walks Invisible, except to God alone

By his permissive will, through heav'n and earth. Milton.

2. Granted; suffered without hindrance; not authorized or favoured.

If this doth authorize usury, which before was but permissive, it is better to mitigate usury by declaration, than to suffer it to rage by connivance. Bacon.

Thus I embolden'd spoke, and freedom us'd Permissive, and acceptance found. Milton.

With what permissive glory since his fall Was left him, or half glitter. Milton.

PERMISSIVELY, adv. [from permissivus.] By bare allowance; without hindrance.

As to a war for the propagation of the christian faith, I would be glad to hear spoken concerning the lawfulness, not only permissively, but whether it be not obligatory to christian princes to declare it. Bacon.

PERMISTION, n. f. [from permisus, Lat.] The act of mixing.

TO PERMIT, v. a. [from permitto, Lat. permittere, Fr.]

1. To allow without command.

What things God doth neither command nor forbid, the same he permit with approbation either to be done or left undone. Hooker.

2. To suffer without authorizing or approving.

3. To allow; to suffer.

Women keep silence in the churches; for it is not permitted unto them to speak. 1 Corinthians.

Ye gliding ghosts, permit me to relate The mystick wonders of your silent state. Dryden.

Age oppresses us by the same degrees that it instructs us, and permits not that our mortal members, which are frozen with our years, should retain the vigour of our youth. Dryden.

We should not permit an allowed, possible, great and weighty good to slip out of our thoughts, without leaving any reliquy, any desire of itself there. Locke.

PER

After men have acquired as much as the laws permit them, they have nothing to do but to take care of the publick. Swift.

4. To give up; to resign. Nor love thy life, nor hate; but what thou liv'st, Live well; how long, how short, permit to heav'n. Milton.

If the course of truth be permitted unto itself it cannot escape many errors. Brown.

To the gods permit the rest. Dryden.

Whate'er can urge ambitious youth to fight, She pompously displays before their sight;

Laws, empire, all permitted to the sword. Dryden.

Let us not aggravate our sorrows, But to the gods permit the event of things. Addison.

PERMIT, n. f. A written permission from an officer for transporting of goods from place to place, showing the duty on them to have been paid.

PERMITTANCE, n. f. [from permit.] Allowance; forbearance of opposition; permission. A bad word.

When this system of air comes, by divine permittance, to be corrupted by poisonous acrimonious steams, what havoc is made in all living creatures? Derham.

PERMIXTION, n. f. [from permixtus, Lat.]

The act of mingling; the state of being mingled.

They tell into the opposite extremity of one nature in Christ, the divine and human natures in Christ, in their contents, by permutation and confusion of substances, and of properties growing into one upon their aduaction. Brewood.

PERMUTATION, n. f. [from permutatio, Fr. permutatio, Latin.] Exchange of one for another.

A permutation of number is frequent in languages. Bentley.

Gold and silver, by their rarity, are wonderfully fitted for the use of permutation for all sorts of commodities. Ray.

TO PERMUTE, v. a. [from permuto, Lat. permutare, Fr.] To exchange.

PERMUTER, n. f. [from permutant, French; from permutare.] An exchanger; he who permutes.

PERNICIOUS, adj. [from perniciosus, Latin; perniculus, Fr.]

1. Mischievous in the highest degree; destructive.

To remove all out of the church, whereat they shew themselves to be sorrowful, would be, as we are persuaded, harmful, if not pernicious thereto. Hooker.

I call you fervile ministers, That have with two pernicious daughters join'd Your high engender'd battles, 'gainst a head So old and white as this. Shakespeare.

Let this pernicious hour Stand aye accursed in the calendar! Shakespeare.

2. [from pernis, Lat.] Quick. An use which I have found only in Milton, and which, as it produces an ambiguity, ought not to be imitated.

Past incentive need

Provide, pernicious with one touch to fire. Milton.

PERNICIOUSLY, adv. [from perniciosus.] Destructively; mischievously; ruinously.

Some wilful wits willfully against their own knowledge, perniciously against their own conscience, have taught. Afham.

All the commons

Hate him perniciously, and with him Ten fathom deep. Shakespeare.

PERNICIOUSNESS, n. f. [from perniciosus.] The quality of being pernicious.

PERNICITY, n. f. [from pernis.] Swiftness; celerity.

Others armed with hard shells, others with prickles, the rest that have no such armour encased with great swiftness or perniciousity. Ray.

PER

PERORATION. n. f. [peroratio, Lat.] The conclusion of an oration.

What in this passionate discourse?

This peroration with such circumstances? Shaksp.

True woman to the last—my peroration

I come to speak in spite of suffocation. Smart.

TO PERPEND. v. a. [perpendo, Latin.] To weigh in the mind; to consider attentively.

Thus it remains and the remainder thus.

Perpend. Shakspere

Perpend, my prince, and give ear. Shakspere.

Consider the different conceits of men, and duly perpend the imperfection of their discourses. Brown.

PERPENNIAL. n. f. [perpigne, French.] A coping stone.

PERPENDICULAR. n. f. [perpendicular, Fr. perpendiculum, Lat.] Any thing hanging down by a straight line. Dut.

PERPENDICULAR. adj. [perpendicular, Fr. perpendicularis, Lat.]

1. Crossing any other line at right angles.

Of two lines, if one be perpendicular,

the other is perpendicular too.

It is a line oblique their atoms rove,

Or in a perpendicular they move;

If some advance not slower in their race,

And some more swift, how could they be entangled? Blackmore.

2. Cutting the horizon at right angles.

Some define the perpendicular altitude of the highest mountains to be four miles. Brown.

PERPENDICULAR. n. f. A line crossing the horizon at right angles.

Though the quantity of water thus rising and falling be nearly constant as to the whole, yet it varies in the several parts of the globe; by reason that the vapours float in the atmosphere, and are not restored down again in a perpendicular upon the same precise tract of land. Woodward.

PERPENDICULARLY. adv. [from perpendicular.]

1. In such a manner as to cut another line at right angles.

2. In the direction of a straight line up and down.

Tea masts attach make not the altitude,

Which thou hast perpendicularly fill'd in. Shakspere.

Irons refrigerated north and south, not only acquire a directive faculty, but if cooled upright and perpendicularly, they will also obtain the same. Brown.

Shoot up an arrow perpendicularly from the earth,

the arrow will return to your foot again. More.

All weights naturally move perpendicularly downward. Ray.

PERPENDICULARITY. n. f. [from perpendicular.] The state of being perpendicular.

The meeting of two lines in the primary essential mode or difference of an angle; the perpendicularity

of these lines is the difference of a right angle. Watts.

PERPENSION. n. f. [from perpend.] Consideration. Not in use.

Unto reasonable perperisions it hath no place in some sciences. Brown.

TO PERPETRATE. v. a. [perpetro, Lat. perpetrari, Fr.]

1. To commit; to act. Always in an ill sense.

Hear of such a crime

As tragick poets, since the birth of time,

Ne'er leav'd a thronging audience to amaze;

But true and perpetrated in our days. Tate.

My tender infants or my careful fire,

Thine they returning will to death require,

Will perpetrate on them the first design,

And take the forfeit of their heads for mine. Dryd.

The forest, which, in after-times,

Fierce Romulus, for perpetrated crimes,

A sacred refuge made. Dryden.

2. It is used by Butler in a neutral sense, in compliance with his verse, but not properly.

Success, the mark no mortal wit,

Or sure hand can always hit;

For whatso'er we perpetrate,

We do but row, we're steer'd by fate. Hudibras.

PERPETRATION. n. f. [from perpetrate.]

1. The act of committing a crime.

A desperate discontented assassin would, after the perpetration, have himself a mere private revenge. Wotton.

A woman, who lends an ear to a seducer, may be inensibly drawn into the perpetration of the most violent acts. Clarissa.

2. A bad action.

The strokes of divine vengeance, or of men's own consciences, always attend injurious perpetrations. King Charles.

PERPETUAL. adj. [perpetuel, Fr. perpetuus, Lat.]

1. Never ceasing; eternal with respect to futurity.

Under the same moral, and therefore under the same perpetual law. Holyday.

Mine is a love, which must perpetual be,

If you can be so just as I am true. Dryden.

2. Continual; uninterrupted; perennial.

Within those banks rivers now

Stream, and perpetual draw their humid train. Milton.

By the muscular motion and perpetual flux of the liquids, a great part of them is thrown out of the body. Arbutnot.

3. Perpetual screw. A screw which acts against the teeth of a wheel, and continues its action without end.

A perpetual screw hath the motion of a wheel and the force of a screw, being both infinite. Wilkins.

PERPETUALLY. adv. [from perpetual.] Constantly; continually; incessantly.

This verse is every where sounding the very thing in your ears; yet the numbers are perpetually varied,

so that the same sounds are never repeated twice. Dryden.

In passing from them to great distances, doth it not grow denser and denser perpetually; and thereby cause the gravity of those great bodies towards one another? Newton.

The bible and common prayer book in the vulgar tongue, being perpetually read in churches, have proved a kind of standard for language, especially to the common people. Saunders.

TO PERPETUATE. v. a. [perpetuer, Fr. perpetuo, Lat.]

1. To make perpetual; to preserve from extinction; to eternize.

Medals, that are at present only mere curiosities, may be of use in the ordinary commerce of life, and at the same time perpetuate the glories of her majesty's reign. Addison.

Man cannot devise any other method so likely to preserve and perpetuate the knowledge and belief of a revelation so necessary to mankind. Forbes.

2. To continue without cessation or intermission.

What is it, but a continued perpetuated voice from heaven, resounding for ever in our ears? to give men

no rest in their sin, no quiet from Christ's importunity, til they awake from their lethargic sleep, and arise from so mortiferous a state, and permit him to give them life. Hammond.

PERPETUATION. n. f. [from perpetuate.] The act of making perpetual; incessant continuance.

Nourishing hair upon the moles of the face, is the perpetuation of a very ancient custom. Brown.

PERPETUITY. n. f. [perpetuité, French; perpetuitas, Latin.]

1. Duration to all futurity.

PER

For men to alter those laws, which God for perpetuity hath established, were presumption and intolerable. Hood.

Yet am I better

Than one that's sick o' th' gout, since he had rather

Groan so in perpetuity, than he cur'd

By the sure physician, death. Shakspere.

Time as long again

Would be fill'd up with our thanks;—

And yet we should, for perpetuity,

Go hence in debt. Shakspere.

Nothing wanted to his noble and heroic intentions,

but only to give perpetuity to that which was in his time so happily established. Bacon.

There can be no other assurance of the perpetuity of this church, but what we have from him that built it. Pearson.

2. Exemption from intermission or cessation.

A cycle or period begins again as often as it ends,

and so obtains a perpetuity. Homer.

What the gospel enjoins is a constant disposition to practice all christian virtues, as often a time and opportunity require; and not a perpetuity of exercise and action; it being impossible at one and the same time to discharge variety of duties. Nepe.

3. Something of which there is no end.

A piece of pottage for a birth-right, a present paid for a perpetuity. South.

The ennobling property of the pleasure, that accrues to a man from religion; is, that he first the property, may be also sure of the perpetuity. South.

The laws of God as well as of the land

Abhor a perpetuity should stand;

Edicts have wings, and hang in fortune's power. Pope.

TO PERPLEX. v. a. [perplexus, Lat.]

1. To disturb with doubtful notions; to entangle; to make anxious; to trouble with suspense or ambiguity; to distrust, to embarrass; to puzzle.

2. Hole made by punching or piercing.

An empty pot without earth in it, may be put over a fruit the better, if some few petusions be made in the pot. Bacon.

To PERVADE. v. a. [pervado, Lat.]

1. To pass through an aperture; to permeate.

The labour'd chyle pervades the pores In all the artful perforated shores. Blackmore.

Paper dipped in water or oil, the oculus mundi stone steeped in water, linen-cloth oiled or varnished, and many other substances soaked in such liquors as will ultimately pervade their little pores, become by that means more transparent than otherwise. Newton.

2. To pass through the whole extension.

Matter, once bereaved of motion, cannot of itself acquire it again, nor till it be struck by some other body from without, or be intrinsically moved by an immaterial self-active substance, that can penetrate and pervade it. Bentley.

What but God,

Pervades, adjusts and agitates the whole? Thomson.

PERVATION. n. f. [from pervade.] The act of pervading or passing through.

If fusion be made rather by the ingress and transcurion of the atoms of fire, than by the bare propagation of that motion, with which fire heats upon the outside of the vessels, that contain the matter to be melted: both those kinds of fluidity, ascribed to salt-petre, will appear to be caused by the pervection of a foreign body. Boyle.

PERVERSE. adj. [pervers, Fr. perversus, Latin.]

1. Distorted from the right.

And nature breeds

Perverts all monstrous, all prodigious things. Milton.

2. Obdurate in the wrong; stubborn; untractable.

Thou for the testimony of the truth hast born Universal reproach; far worse to bear Than violence; for this was all thy care To stand approv'd in sight of God, though worlds Judg'd thee perverse. Milton.

To so perverse a sex all grace is vain,

It gives them courage to offend again. Dryden.

3. Petulant; vexatious; peevish; desirous to cross and vex; cross.

O gentle Romeo, If thou dost love, pronounce it faithfully, Or if you think I am too quickly won, I'll frown and be perverse, and say thee nay, So thou wilt woo: but else not for the world. Shakespeare.

PERVERSELY. adv. [from perverse.] With intent to vex; peevishly; vexatiously, spitefully; crossly; with petty malignity.

Men *perverse*ly take up piques and displeasures at others, and then every opinion of the disliked person must partake of his fate. Decey of Pity.

Men that do not *perverse*ly use their words, or on purpose set themselves to cavil, seldom mistake the signification of the names of simple ideas. Locke.

A patriot is a dangerous post.

When wanted by his country most,

*Perverse*ly comes in evil times,

Where virtues are imputed crimes. Swift.

PERVERSENES. n. f. [from perverse.]

1. Petulance; peevishness; spiteful cross-ness.

Virtue hath some *perverse*ness; for she will Neither believe her good, nor others ill. Dennis.

Her whom he wishes most, shall seldom gain

Through her *perverse*ness; but shall see her gain'd

By a far worse. Milton.

The *perverse*ness of my fate is such,

That he's not mine, because he's mine too much. Dryden.

When a friend in kindness tries

To shew you where your error lies,

Conviction does but more incense;

*Perverse*ness is your whole defence. Swift.

2. Perversion; corruption. Not in use.

Neither can this be meant of evil governors or tyrants; for they are often established as potentates; but of some *perverse*ness and defection in the nation itself. Bacon.

PERVERSION. n. f. [perverio, Fr. from perverse.] The act of perverting; change to something worse.

Women to govern men, slaves freemen, as much in the same degree; all being total violations and perversions of the laws of nature and nations. Bacon.

He supposes that whole reverend body are so far from disliking popery, that the hopes of enjoying the abbey lands would be an effectual incentive to their perversion. Swift.

PERVERTSITY. n. f. [pervertit, Fr. from perverse.] Pervertisness; crossness.

What strange pervertsity is this of man!

When 'twas a crime to take th' enlightning tree,

He could not then his hand refrain. Milton.

To PERVERT. v. a. [pervertio, Lat. per- vertir, Fr.]

1. To distort from the true end or purpose.

Instead of good they may work ill, and pervert justice to extreme injustice. Spenser.

If thou feelst the oppression of the poor, and violent perverting of justice in a province, resist not. Eccl'ast'ic'.

If then his providence

Out of our evil seek to bring forth good,

Our labour must be to pervert that end.

And out of good still to find means of evil. Milton.

He has perverted my meaning by his glosses; and interpreted my words into blasphemy, of which they were not guilty. Dryden.

Perjury has wrote a volume to explain this case of the nymphs with more piety than judgment; and another person has perverted it into obscenity; and both allegorically. Brown.

We cannot charge any thing upon their nature, till we take care that it is perverted by their education. Law.

Will God excuse his ire
 For such a petty trespass? Milton.

From thence a thousand lesser poets sprung,
 Like petty princes from the fall of Rome. Denham.
 They believe one only chief and great God, which hath been from all eternity; who, when he propoed to make the world, made first other gods of a principal order; and after, the sun, moon, and stars, as petty gods. Stillingfleet.

By all I have read of petty commonwealths, as well as the great ones, it seems to me, that a free people do of themselves divide into three powers. Swift.

Bolonia water'd by the petty Rhine. Addison.
 Can an example be given, in the whole course of this war, where we have treated the pettiest prince, with whom we have had to deal, in so contemptuous a manner? Swift.

PETULANCE. n. f. [petulance, Fr. petu- lance, lantia, Lat.] Sauciness; peevishness; wantonness.

It was excellently said of that philosopher, that here was a wall or parapet of teeth set in our mouth, to restrain the petulancy of our words. Ben Jonson.
 Such was others petulancy, that they joyed to see their betters shamefully outraged and abused. A. C.

Wise men knew, that which looked like pride in some, and like petulance in others, would, by experience in affairs and conversation amongst men, be in time wrought off. Clarendon.

However their numbers, as well as their influence and perverseness increased, many influences of petulancy and scornfulness are to be seen in their pamphlets. Swift.

There appears in our age a pride and petulancy in youth, zealous to cast off the restraint of their fathers and teachers. Watts.

PETULANT. adj. [petulans, Lat. petulant, swer. Watts.

2. Wanton.

The tongue of a man is so petulant, and his thoughts so variable, that one oft findeth by too great stress upon any private speeches and opinions. Spenser.

PETULANTLY. adv. [from petulant.]
 With petulance; with saucy pertness.

PEW. n. f. [puge, Dutch.] A seat enclosed in a church.

When Sir Thomas More was lord chancellor, he did sit, at meals, to sit in the chancel, and his lady in a pew. Bacon.

Should our sex take it into their heads to wear trunk breeches at church, a man and his wife would fill a whole pew. Addison.

She decently, in form, pays heav'n its due;
 And makes a civil visit to her pew. Young.

PEWET. n. f. [piewit, Dutch; vannellus.]

1. A compound of metals; an artificial metal.

Nine parts or more of tin, with one of regulus of antimony, compose pewter. Pemberton.

Cowle pewter is made of fine tin and lead. Bacon.
 The pewter, into which no water could enter, became more white, and liker to silver, and less brittle. Bacon.

Pewter dishes, with water in them, will not sink easily, but without it they will; nay, butter or oil, in themselves insubmersible, yet, by their mixture, will sink. Bacon.

2. The plates and dishes in a house.

The eye of the mistress was wont to make her pewter shine. Addison.

PEWTERER. n. f. [from pewter.] A smith who works in pewter.

He shall charge you and discharge you with the motion of a pewterer's hammer. Shakespeare.
 We caused a skilful pewterer to close the vessel in our presence with solder exquisitely. Boyle.

 thick, that the phenomenon might be conspicuous. Newton.

PHAGEDENIA. n. f. [φαιδαία; from φαγε- in, to eat.] An ulcer, where the sharpness of the humours eats away the flesh.

PHAGEDENICK. adj. [phagedenique, PHAGEDENOUS. French] Eating;
 corroding.

Phagedenick medicines, are those which eat away fungous or proud flesh. Diet.

A bubo, according to its malignancy, either proves easily curable, or terminates in a phagede- nous ulcer with jagged lips. Weyman.

When they are very purid and corrosive, which circumstances give them the name of foul phagede- nick ulcers, some spirits of wine should be added to the fomentation. Sharp.

PHALANX. n. f. [phalanx, Latin; phalange, French.] A troop of men closely embodied.

Far otherwise th' inviolable fairs,
 In cubic phalanx firm, advanc'd entire,
 Invulnerable, impetuously arm'd. Milton.

The Grecian phalanx, moveless as a tow'r,
 On all sides batter'd, yet resists his power. Pope.

PHANTASIA. n. f. [φάντασμα, phantasia;
PHANTASMA. phantasmie, phantasie,
 French.] Vain and airy appearance;
 something appearing only to imagination.

All the internis is like a phantasia or a hideous dream. Shaksp.

The Phantasia is a Spaurid that keeps here in court of Phantasia, a monarch, and one that makes sport for the prince and his book-makers. Shakspere.

They believe, as they believe anils, because they see but phantasia or apparitions. Raleigh.

It is a great ones were inwardness, the people were not, yet, entertaining this airy body or phan- tasia with incredible affection; partly out of their great devotion to the house of York, partly out of proud humour. Bacon.

Why.
 In this infernal vale first met, thou call'st
 Me father, and that phantasia call'st my son. Milt.

Allying, by his devilish art, to reach
 The organs of her sanity, and with them forge Illusions, as he list, phantasies and dreams. Milton.

PHANTASTICAL. See FANTASTICAL.
PHANTASTICK.

PHANTOM. n. f. [phantome, French.]

1. A spectre; an apparition.

If he cannot help believing, that such things he saw and heard, he may still have room to believe that what this airy phantom said is not absolutely to be relied on. Atterbury.

A constant vapour o'er the palace flies;
 Strange phantoms rising as the justs write;
 Dreadful as hermits dreams, in haunted shades,
 Or bright as visions of exulting aids. Pope.

2. A fancied vision.

Restless and impatient to try every overture of present happiness, he hunts a phantom he can never overtake. Rogers.

As Pallas will'd along, the sable skies,
 To calm the queen, the phantom sister flies. Pope.

PHARISAEICAL. adj. [from pharisee.] Ritual; externally religious; from the sect of the Pharisees, whose religion consisted almost wholly in ceremonies.

The causes of superstition are pleading and sensual rites, exerts of outward and pharisaical solitudes, over-great reverence of traditions which cannot but lodge the church. Bacon.

Shall we not be deluded with pharisaical wallings instead of christian pharisees.

PHARMACEUTICAL. adj. [φάρμακον, PHARMACEUTICK. adj. [φάρμακον, pharmakia.] Relating to the knowledge or art of pharmacy, and preparation of medicines.

τομή.] The act of making an incision into the windpipe, used when some tumour in the throat hinders respiration.

PHASEIS. n. f. [phaseli, Lat.] French-beans. Ainsworth.

PHASIS. n. f. In the plural phasies. [φάσις, phasie, French.] Appearance exhibited by any body; as the changes of the moon.
 All the hypotheses yet contrived, were built upon too narrow an inspection of the phasies of the universe. Clavelle.

He o'er the seas shall love or fame pursue;
 And other mouths, another phasie view;
 Fixt to the rudder, he shall boldly steer.
 And pass those rocks which Tiphys us'd to fear. Creech.

PHASM. n. f. [φάσμα.] Appearance;
 phantom; fancied apparition.

Thence proceed many aerial actions and phasmas, and chymisms created by the vanity of our own hearts or seduction of evil spirits, and not planted in them by God. Hammond.

PHASANT. n. f. [faisan, French; pha- sanus, from Phasis, the river of Colchos.] A kind of wild cock.

The hardest to draw are tame birds; as the cock, peacock, and pheasant. Peacock on Drawing.
 French as I please, I doubt our serious men
 Will chase a pheasant still before a hen. Pope.

PHIER. n. f. A companion. See FIER.

Spenser.

To PHIESE. v. a. [perhaps to frase.] To comb; to fleece; to curry.

As he be proud with me, I'll phiese his pride. Shakespeare.

PHENICOPTER. n. f. [φαινικόπτερος; phae- nicopterus, Latin.] A kind of bird, which is thus described by Martial:

Dat mihi penna rubens nonne sed lingua gulyia

Nontra sapit; quid si garrula lingua foret?

He blended together the lyers of gillyflowers, the brains of pheasants and peacocks, wings of phenicopter, and the tails of lamprids. Herrick.

PHENIX. n. f. [phénix; phénix, Latin.] The bird which is supposed to exist single, and to rise again from its own ashes.

There is one tree, the phoenix throne; one phoenix
At this hour reigning there. Shakespeare.
To all the world he seems a phoenix. Milton.
Having the idea of a phoenix in my mind, the first enquiry is, whether such a thing does exist?
Locke.

PHENOMENON. n. f. [phainomenon; phenomene, French:] it is therefore often written phænomenon; but being naturalised, it has changed the æ, which is not in the English language, to e. But if it has the original plural termination phænomena, it should, I think, be written with a.]

1. Appearance; visible quality.

Short-sighted minds are unfit to make philosophers, whose business it is to describe, in comprehensive theories, the phenomena of the world and their causes. Burnet.

There are curiosities of little or no moment to the understanding the phenomenon of nature. Newton.

The most considerable phenomenon, belonging to terrestrial bodies, is gravitation, whereby all bodies in the vicinity of the earth press toward its centre. Bentley's Sermons.

2. Any thing that strikes by any new appearance.

PHIAL. n. f. [phiala, Latin; phiole, Fr.] A small bottle.

Upon my secure hour thy uncle stole
With juice of cursed hebenon in a phial. Shakspeare.
He proves his explications by experiments made with a phial of water, and with globes of glass filled with water. Newton.

PHILANTHROPY. n. f. [philw and anthropos.] Love of mankind; goodness.

Such a transient temporary good nature is not that philanthropy, that love of mankind, which deserves the title of a moral virtue. Addison.

PHILIPPICK. n. f. [from the invectives of Demosthenes against Philip of Macedon.] Any invective declamation.

PHILOLOGER. n. f. [philologos.] One whose chief study is language; a grammarian; a critic.

Philologers and critical discourses, who look beyond the shell and obvious exteriors of things, will not be angry with our narrower explorations. Brown.
You expect, that I should discourse of this matter like a naturalist, not a philologer. Stayle.
The best philologers say, that the original word does not only signify domestic, as opposed to foreign, but also private, as opposed to common. Spratt's Sermons.

PHILOLOGICAL. adj. [from philology.] Critical; grammatical.

Studies, called philological, are history, language, grammar, rhetoric, poetry, and criticism. Watts.
He who pretends to the learned professions, if he doth not arise to be a critic himself in philological matters, should frequently converse with dictionaries, paraphrases, commentators, or other critics, which may relieve any difficulties. Watts.

PHILOLOGIST. n. f. See PHILOLOGER. A critic; a grammarian.

PHILOLOGY. n. f. [philologia; philologie, French.] Criticism; grammatical learning.

Temper all discourses of philology with interpositions of morality. Walker.

PHILOMEL. n. f. [from Philomela, changed into a bird.]

The nightingale.
Time drives the flocks from field to field,
When rivers rage, and rocks grow cold,
And Philomel becomes a thrush. Shakspeare.

Admires the jay the insect's gilded wings,
Or hears the hawk when Philomela sings? Pope.
PHILOMOT. adj. [corrupted from feuille morte, a dead leaf.] Coloured like a dead leaf.

One of them was blue, another yellow, and another philomot; the fourth was of a pink colour, and the fifth of a pale green. Addison.

PHILOSOPHEME. n. f. [philosophème.] Principle of reasoning; theorem. An unusual word.

You will learn how to address yourself to children for their benefit, and derive some useful philosophèmes for your own entertainment. Watts.

PHILOSOPHER. n. f. [philosophus, Latin; philosophe, French.] A man deep in knowledge, either moral or natural.

Many found in belief have been also great philosophers. Hooker.

The philosopher hath long ago told us, that according to the divers natures of things, so must the evidences for them be; and that 'tis an argument of an undisciplined wit not to acknowledge this. Wilkins.

They all our fam'd philosophers despise,
And would our faith by force of reason try. Dryden.

If the philosophers by fire had been so wary in their observations and sincere in their reports, as those, who call themselves philosophers, ought to have been, our acquaintance with the bodies here about us had been yet much greater. Locke.

Adam, in the state of innocence, came into the world a philosopher, which sufficiently appeared by his writing the natures of things upon their names; he could view essences in themselves, and read forms without the comment of their respective properties. South.

PHILOSOPHERS stone. n. f. A stone dreamed of by alchymists, which, by its touch, converts base metals into gold.

That stone
Philosophers in vain so long have sought. Milton.
PHILOSOPHICK. adj. [philosophique, philosophical.] French; from philosophy.]

1. Belonging to philosophy; suitable to a philosopher; formed by philosophy.

Others in virtue plac'd felicity:
The stoick last in philosophick pride
By him call'd virtue, and his virtuous man,
Wife, perfect in himself, and all possessing. Milton.
How could our chymick friends go on
To find the philosophick stone? Prior.

When the safety of the publick is endangered, the appearance of a philosophical or affected indolence must arise either from stupidity or perfidiousness. Addison's Freeholder.

2. Skilled in philosophy.

We have our philosophical persons to make modern and familiar things supernatural and cauleless. Shakspeare.

Acquaintance with God is not a speculative knowledge, built on abstracted reasoning about his nature and essence, such as philosophical minds often busy themselves in, without reaping from thence any advantage towards regulating their passions, but practical knowledge. Atterbury.

3. Frugal; abstemious.

This is what nature's wants may well suffice:
But since among mankind few see these are,
Who will constrain to philosophick fare,
I'll mingle something of our times to please. Dryden.

PHILOSOPHICALLY. adv. [from philosophical.] In a philosophical manner; rationally; wisely.

The law of commonwealths that cut off the right hand of malefactors, if philosophically executed, is impartial; otherwise the amputation not equally peniteth all. Brown.

No man has ever treated the passions of love with so much delicacy of thought and of expression, or searched into the nature of it more philosophically than Ovid. Lockyer.

If natural laws were once settled, they are never to be violated; to violate and infringe them, is the same as what we call miracle, and doth not found any philosophy. Lockyer.

To play the philosopher is to reason like a philosopher; to moralize; to search into nature; to inquire into the causes of effects.

Qualities occur to Aristotle, and he is so to us; and we must not philosophize beyond sympathy and antipathy. Glennville.

The wax philosopher upon the matter, and finding out at last that it was burning made the brick so hard, cast life into the fire. L'Estrange.

Two disciples of the schools were philosophizing upon the advantages of mankind above all other creatures. L'Estrange.

Some of our philosophizing divines have too much exalted the faculties of our souls, when they have maintained, that by their force mankind has been able to find out God. Dryden.

PHILOSOPHY. n. f. [philosophie, Fr. philosophia, Latin.]

1. Knowledge natural or moral.

I had never read, heard, nor seen any thing, I had never any taste of philosophy not inward feeling in myself, which for a while I did not call to my remembrance. Sidney.

Hang up philosophy;
Unless philosophy can make a Juliet,
Displant a town, reverse a prince's doom,
It helps not. Shakspeare.

The progress you have made in philosophy, hath enabled you to benefit yourself with what I have written. Dugby.

2. Hypothesis or system upon which natural effects are explained.

We shall in vain interpret their words by the notions of our philosophy, and the doctrines in our schools. Locke.

3. Reasoning; argumentation.

Of good and evil much they argue'd then,
Vain wisdom all and false philosophy. Milton.
His decisions are the judgment of his passions not of his reason, the philosophy of the flatterer not of the man. Rogers.

4. The course of sciences read in the schools.

PHILTRE. n. f. [philtre; philtre, French.] Something to cause love.

The melting kiss that tips
The jellied philtre of her lips. Clarendon.
This cup a cure for both our ills has brought,
You need not fear a philtre in the draught. Dryden.
A philtre that has neither drug nor enchantment in it, love if you would raise love. Addison.

TO PHILTRE. v. a. [from the noun.] To charm to love.

Let not those that have repudiated the more inviting sins, shew themselves philtred and bewitched by this. Government of the Tongue.

PHIZ. n. f. [This word is formed by a ridiculous contraction from physiognomy, and should therefore, if it be written at all, be written phiz.] The face, in a sense of contempt.

His air was too proud, and his features amiss,
As if being a traitor had alter'd his phiz. Stepney.

PHLEBOTOMIST. n. f. [phlebotomiste, Fr. from phlé and tomos.] One that opens a vein; a blood-letting.

TO PHLEBOTOMIZE. v. a. [phlebotomiser, French; from phlebotomy.] To let blood. The frail bodies of men must have an evacuation for their humours, and be phlebotomized. Hewitt.

PHLEBOTOMY. n. f. [phlebotomia, phlébotomie, vena, and tomos; phlebotomic, French.] Blood-letting; the act or practice of opening a vein for medical intentions.

Phlebotomy is not such a trifling matter; the blood so flowing in veins keeps all veins. Hewitt.
Although in the phlebotomy of the liver or spleen, considerations are made in phlebotomy to their liver

tion, yet, when the heart is affected, it is thought as essential to bleed on the right as the left. Brown.
Pains for the spending of the spirits, come nearest to the copious and swift loss of spirits by phlebotomy. Harvey.

PHLEGM. n. f. [φλέγμα; phlegma, Fr.]

1. The watery humour of the body, which, when it predominates, is supposed to produce sluggishness or dulness.

Make the proper use of each extreme,
And write with fury, but correct with phlegm. Rost.
He who, supreme in judgment as in wit,
Might boldly censure, as he boldly writ,
Yet judg'd with coolness, though he sung with fire;
His precepts teach but what his works inspire.
Our critics take a contrary extreme,
They judge with fury, but they write with phlegm. Pope.

Let melancholy rule supreme,
Choler preside, or blood or phlegm,
It makes no difference in the case,
Nor is complexion honour's place. Swift.

2. Water, among chymists.

A linen cloth, dipped in common spirit of wine, is not burnt by the flame, because the phlegm of the liquor defends the cloth. Boyle.

PHLEGMAGOGUE. n. f. [φλέγμα and ἄγω; phlegmagogue, French.] A purge of the milder sort, supposed to evacuate phlegm, and leave the other humours.

The pituitous temper of the stomachick ferment must be corrected, and phlegmagogues must evacuate it. Floyer.

PHLEGMATICK. adj. [φλεγματικός; phlegmaticque, French; from phlegm.]

1. Abounding in phlegm.

The putrid vapours, though exciting a fever, do colliquate the phlegmatic humours of the body. Harvey.

Chewing and smoking of tobacco is only proper for phlegmatick people. Arbutnot.

2. Generating phlegm.

A neat's foot, I fear, is too phlegmatick a meat. Shakespeare.

Negroes, transplanted into cold and phlegmatick habitations, continue their hue in themselves and generations. Brown.

3. Watery.

Spirit of wine is inflammable by means of its oily parts, and being distilled often from salt of tartar, grows by every distillation more and more aqueous and phlegmatick. Newton.

4. Dull; cold; frigid.

As the inhabitants are of a heavy phlegmatick temper, if any leading member has more fire than comes to his share, it is quickly tempered by the coldness of the rest. Addison.

Who but a husband ever could persuade
His heart to leave the bosom of thy love,
For any phlegmatick design of state. Southern.

PHLEGMON. n. f. [φλεγμονή.] An inflammation; a burning tumour.

Phlegmon, or inflammation, is the first degeneration from good blood, and nearest of kin to it. Wifeman.

PHLEGMONOUS. adj. [from phlegmon.] Inflammatory; burning.

It is generated secondarily out of the drops and remainder of a phlegmonous or oedematick tumour. Harvey.

PHLEME. n. f. [from phlebotomy.] A fleam, so it is commonly written; an instrument which is placed on the vein and driven into it with a blow; particularly in bleeding horses.

PHLOGISTON. n. f. [φλογιστίς, from φλόξ.]

1. Achymical liquor extremely inflammable.

2. The inflammable part of any body.

PHOSPHICKS. n. f. [from φως.] The doctrine of sounds.

PHOSPHATICK. adj. [φωσ and αμωτω.]

Having the power to inflame or turn the sound, and by that to alter it.

VOL. II.

The magnifying the found by the polyphonisms or repercussions of the rocks, and other phonocampstick objects. Derham.

PHOSPHOR. } n. f. [phosphorus, Lat.]

PHOSPHORUS. }

1. The morning star.

Why sit we sad when phosphorus shines so clear? Pope.

2. A chymical substance which, exposed to the air, takes fire.

Phosphorus is obtained by distillation from urine putrified, by the force of a very vehement and long continued fire. Pemberton.

Of lambent flame you have whole sheets in a handful of phosphor. Addison.

Liquid and solid phosphorus show their flames more conspicuously, when exposed to the air. Cheyne.

PHRASE. n. f. [φράσις.]

1. An idiom; a mode of speech peculiar to a language.

2. An expression; a mode of speech.

Now mince the sin,
And mollify damnation with a phrase:
Say you consented not to Sancho's death,
But barely not forbade it. Dryden.

To fear the Lord, and depart from evil, are phrases which the scripture useth to express the sum of religion. Tillotson.

3. Style; expression.

Thou speak'st
In better phrase and matter than thou didst. Shakspeare.

TO PHRASE. v. a. [from the noun.] To style; to call; to term.

These sons,
For so they phrase them, by their heralds challenged
The noble spirits to arms. Shakspeare.

PHRASEOLOGY. n. f. [φράσις and λόγος.]

1. Style; diction.

The scholars of Ireland seem not to have the least conception of a style, but run on in a flat phraseology, often mingled with barbarous terms. Swift.

2. A phrase book. Ainsworth.

PHRENETICK. } adj. [φρενιτικός; phreni-

PHRENTICK. } adj. [from φρενις; phrenesic, Fr. whence, by contraction, phrensy.]

Madness; frantickness. This is too often written frenzy. See FRENZY.

Phreneticks imagine they see that without, which their imagination is affected with within. Harvey.

What ætsum, what phrenetick mood,
Makes you thus lavish of your blood? Hudibras.

The world was little better than a common fold of phreneticks and bedlams. Woodward.

PHRENITIS. n. f. [φρενιτις.] Madness; inflammation of the brain.

It is allowed to prevent a phrenitis. Wifeman.

PHRENSY. n. f. [from φρενις; phrenesic, Fr. whence, by contraction, phrensy.]

Madness; frantickness. This is too often written frenzy. See FRENZY.

Many never think on God, but in extremity of fear, and then perplexity not suffering them to be idle, they think and do as it were in a phrensy. Hooker.

Demoniack phrensy, moping melancholy. Milt.
Would they only please themselves in the delusion, the phrensy were more innocent; but lunatics will needs be kings. Decay of Piety.

Phrensy or inflammation of the brain, profuse hemorrhages from the nose relieve, and copious bleeding in the temporal arteries. Arbutnot.

PHTHINICAL. adj. [φθισικός; phtyque, Fr. from phtisick.]

Wasting.
Collection of purulent matter in the capacity of the breast, if not suddenly cured, doth undoubtedly impell the patient into a phtisical consumption. Harvey on Consumptions.

PHTHISICK. n. f. [φθισίς; phtyic, Fr.]

A consumption.

His disease was a phtisick or asthma oft incurring to an orthopnea. Harvey on Consumptions.

PHTHISIS. n. f. [φθισίς.] A consumption.

If the lungs be wounded deep, though they escape the first nine days, yet they terminate in a phtisis or fistula. Wifeman.

PHYLACTERY. n. f. [φύλακτρον; phylactery, Fr.] A bandage on which was inscribed some memorable sentence.

The phylacteries on their wrists and foreheads were looked on as spells, which would yield them impunity for their disobedience. Hammond.

Golden sayings,
On large phylacteries expressive writ,
Were to the foreheads of the Rabbins ty'd. Prior.

PHYSICAL. adj. [physique, Fr. from physick.]

1. Relating to nature or to natural philosophy; not moral.

The physical notion of necessity, that without which the work cannot possibly be done; it cannot be affirmed of all the articles of the creed, that they are thus necessary. Hammond.

I call that physical certainty which doth depend upon the evidence of sense, which is the first and highest kind of evidence of which human nature is capable. Widius.

To reflect on those innumerable secrets of nature and physical philosophy, which Homer wrought in his allegories, what a new scene of wonder may this afford us! Pope.

Charity in its origin is a physical and necessary consequence of the principle of re-union. Chayne.

2. Pertaining to the science of healing; as, a physical treatise, physical herbs.

3. Medicinal; helpful to health.

Is Brutus sick? and is it physical
To walk unbraced, and suck up the humours
Of the dank morning? Shakspeare.

The blood I drop is rather physical Than dangerous to me. Shakspeare.

4. Resembling physick; as, a physical taste.

PHYSICALLY. adv. [from physick.]

1. According to nature; by natural operation; in the way or sense of natural philosophy; not morally.

Time measuring out their motion, informs us of the periods and terms of their duration, rather than effecteth or physically produceth the same. Brown.

The outward act of worship may be considered physically and abstractly from any law, and so it depends upon the nature of the intention, and morally, as good or evil: and so it receives its denunciation from the law. Stillingfleet.

Though the act of the will commanding, and the act of any other faculty, executing that which is so commanded, be physically and in the precise nature of things distinct, yet morally as they proceed from one entire, free, moral agent, may pass for one and the same action. South's Sermons.

I do not say, that the nature of light consists in small round globules, for I am not now treating physically of light or colours. Locke.

2. According to the science of medicine; according to the rules of medicine.

He that lives physically, must live moderately. Cheney.

PHYSICIAN. n. f. [physicien, Fr. from physick.] One who professes the art of healing.

Trust not the physician,
His antidotes are poison, and he slays
More than you rob. Shakspeare.

Some physicians are so conformable to the humour of the patient, as they press out the true cure of the disease; and others are so regular, as they respect not sufficiently the condition of the patient. Bacon.

This gratulatory verse to king Henry is not more witty than the epigram upon the name of Nicoblaus, an ignorant physician, who had been the death of thousands. Peacham of Poetry.

Taught by thy art divine, the sage physician
Eludes the urn, and chains, or eases death. Prior.

PHYSICK. n. f. [φυσική, which originally signifying natural philosophy, has been transferred in many modern languages to medicine.]

1. The science of healing.

Were it my business to understand physick, would not the safer way be to consult nature herself in the history of diseases and their cures, than to consult the principles of the dogmatists, methodists, or chymists? Locke.

2. Medicines; remedies.

In itself we desire health, physick only for health's sake. Hooker.

Use physick or ever thou be sick. Ecclesiasticus.

Prayer is the best physick for many melancholy diseases. Peachum.

He 'scapes the best, who nature to repair
Draws physick from the fields in draughts of vital air. Dryden.

As all seasons are not proper for physick, so all times are not fit for purging the body politic. Davenant.

the common calix, a peculiar case containing their seed, and their flower consisting of five leaves. 23. Plants with a true bulbous root, which consists but of one round ball or head, out of whose lower part go many fibres to keep it firm in the earth: the points of this kind come up but with one leaf; they have no footstalks, and are long and slender: the food vessels are divided into three partitions; the food vessels are hexapetalous. 24. Such as have their roots approaching to a bulbous form: these emit, at first, come up, but one leaf, and in leaves, flowers and roots resemble the true bulbous plant. 25. Culmiferous plants, with a grassy leaf, are such as have a tough hollow jointed stalk, without sharp-pointed teeth at each joint, encircling the stalk, and let a tooth at any joint if it is contained within a chaffy husk. 26. Plants with a grassy leaf, but not culmiferous, with an imperfect or flammulent flower. 27. Plants whose place of growth is uncertain and various, chiefly water plants.

Butchers and villains,

How fast a plant have you untimely crop'd, Shaksp.
Between the vegetable and sensitive province
Of a plant animal and some kind of insects
Amongst plant vegetables, that seem to participate
Of both. Hale.

The next species of life above the vegetable, is that of life, where with some of those productions, which we call plant-animals, are endowed. Grew.
It continues to be the same plant, as long as it partakes of the same life, though that life be communicated to new particles of matter, vitally united to the living plant, in a like continued organization, conformable to that sort of plants. Locke.

One I was skill'd in every herb that grew,
And every plant that drinks the morning dew. Pope.
Some plants the sun shine seek, and some the shade;
At night the more they spread, but check their bloom
At morn, and lose their verdure and perfume. Harte.

2. A sapling.

What have continual plodders ever won,
Save hate authority from others books? Shak.

P L O T. n. f. [plot, Saxon. See PLAT.]
1. A final extent of ground.
It was a chosen plot of fertile land,
Amongst wide wastes set like a little nest,
As if it had by nature's cunning hand
Be choicely picked out from all the rest. Spenser.

Plant ye with alders or willows a plot,
Where yearly us needeth no poles may be got. Tupper.

This liketh moory plots, delights in fedge bowers. Drayton.
Many unfrequented plots there are,
Fitted by kind for rape and villany. Shakespeare.
Were there but this single plot to lose,
This mould of Marcus, they to dust would grind it,
And throw't against the wind. Shakespeare.

When we mean to build,
We first survey the plot, then draw the model,
And when we see the figure of the house,
Then we must rate the cost of the erection. Shakspeare.
Weeds grow not in the wild uncultivated waste, but in garden plots under the negligent hand of a gardener. Locke.

2. A plantation laid out.
Some goddes inhabiteth this region, who is the soul of this soil; for neither is any less than a goddess, worthy to be burned in such a heap of pleasures; nor any less than a goddess could have made it to perfect a plot. Sidney.

3. A form; a scheme; a plan.
The law of England never was properly applied unto the Irish nation, as by a purposed plot of government, but as they could intimate and flent themselves under the same by their humble carriage. Spenser on Ireland.

4. [imagined by Skinner to be derived from platform, but evidently contracted from complot, Fr.] A conspiracy; a secret design formed against another.
I have overheard a plot of death upon him. Shakspeare.
Easy seems the thing to every one,
That nought could cross their plot, or them suppress. Daniel.

O think what anxious moments pass between
The birth of plots, and their last fatal periods!
O 'tis a dreadful interval of time,
Made up of horrid all, and lig with death! Addison.

5. An intrigue; an affair complicated, involved, and embarrassed; the story of a play, comprising an artful involution of affairs, unravelled at last by some unexpected means.
Nothing must be sung between the acts,
But what some way conduces to the plot. Roscom.

Our author
Produce'd his play, and begg'd the knight's advice,
Made him observe the subject and the plot,
The manners, passions, unities, what not? Pope.

They deny the plot to be tragical, because its catastrophe is a wedding, which hath ever been accounted comical. Gay.

If the plot or intrigue must be natural, and such as springs from the subject, then the winding up of the plot must be a probable consequence of all that went before. Pope.

6. Stratagem; secret combination to any ill end.
Frustrate all our plots and wiles. Milton.

7. Contrivance; deep reach of thought.
Who says he was not
A man of much plot,
May repent that false accusation;
Having plotted and pen'd
Six plays to attend
The taice of his negotiation. Denham

That world of wealth I've drawn together For mine own ends, indeed, to gain the pope. Shakespeare.

POPERY. n. f. [from pope.] The religion of the church of Rome.

Pope, for corruptions in doctrine and discipline, I look upon to be the most absurd system of Christianity. South.

POPESEYE. n. f. [pope and eye.] The gland surrounded with fat in the middle of the thigh; why so called I know not.

POPEGUN. n. f. [pop and gun.] A gun with which children play, that only makes noise.

Life is not weak enough to be destroyed by the popgun artillery of tea and coffee. Clayton.

POPEJAY. n. f. [popejay, Dutch; papagayo, Spanish.]

1. A parrot. Young popajays learn quickly to speak. Archer.

The great red and blue parrot, there are these greater, the middle most called popajays, and the lesser called paroquets. Clayton.

2. A woodpecker. So it seems to be called here.

Terpichore would be expressed, upon her being a colonet of those green feathers of the popajay, in token of that victory which the muses got the daughters of Parnassus, who were turned to popajays or woodpeckers. Peacham.

3. A trifling top.

I, all in a tring with my wounds, being gull'd To be to better'd by a popajay, Answer'd me delectingly, I know not what. Shakespeare.

POPEISH. adj. [from pope.] Taught by the pope; relating to popery; peculiar to popery.

In this trade as they affirm, so we deny, that whatsoever is popish we ought to abrogate. Hooker.

I know thou art religious, With twenty popish tricks and ceremonies. Shakespeare.

POPEISHLY. adv. [from popish.] With tendency to popery; in a popish manner.

She baffled the many attempts of her enemies, and entirely broke the whole force of that party among her subjects, which was popishly affected. Addison.

A friend in Ireland, popishly speaking, I believ'd constantly well disposed towards me. Pope to Swift.

POPLAR. n. f. [peuplier, Fr. populus, Lat.] A tree.

The leaves of the poplar are broad, and for the most part ancyer; the male trees produce numerous flowers, which have many little leaves and apices, but are barren; the female trees produce membranaceous pods, which open into two parts, containing many seeds, which have a large quantity of down adhering to them, and are collected into spikes. Mitton.

Pop is drawn with the face of an ox, with a land of poplar upon his head. Peacham.

All he describ'd was present to their eyes, And as he rais'd his verse, the poplars seem'd to rise. Shakespeare.

POP

POPE. n. f. [from pope, Lat.] A flower.

On these are eighteen species: some sort is cultivated for medicinal use; and some suppose it to be the plant whence opium is produced. Miller.
His temples laid with poppies were o'erspread,
That nodding seem'd to consecrate his head. Dryden.
Dr. Lister has been guilty of mistake, in the collections he makes on what he calls the sleeping poppy in his hands. Adams.
And pale Nymphs with her clay-cold leath;
And poppies, which turn the sleep of death. Harte.

POPULACE. n. f. [populace, French; from populus, Latin.] The vulgar; the multitude.

Now swarms the populace, a countless throng,
Youth and hoar age tumultuous pour along. Pope.
The tribunes and people having subdued all competitors, began in the last game of a prevalent populace to chide the tribunes a matter. Saunders.

POPULACE. n. f. [populace, French.] The common people; the multitude.

And colours of piety and virtuous policies march,
Not only with decency, but applause as to the populace. King Charles.

When he thinks one monarch's lust too mild a regiment, he can let in the whole populace of his upon the soul. Dean of Poitiers.

POPULAR. adj. [populaire, Fr. popularis, Latin.]

1. Vulgar; plebeian.

I was sorry to hear what partiality and popular heat elections were carried in many places. King Charles.

The emperor found in her popular tribes
Of commonalty. Milton.

2. Suitable to the common people; familiar; not critical.

Homages are plain and popular instructions. Locke.

3. Beloved by the people; pleasing to the people.

It might have been more popular and pleasurable to vulgar ears, if this first discourse had been spent in extolling the force of laws. Hobbes.

Such as were popular,
And well deserving, were advanced by grace. Daniel.

The old general was set aside, and prince Rupert put into the command, which was no popular change. Clarendon.

4. Studious of the favour of the people.

A popular man, in truth, no better than a plebeian to common fame and to the people. Dryden.

His virtues have undone his country;
Each power or humanity is to do him. Addison.

5. Prevailing or raging among the populace; as a popular distemper.

POPULARITY. n. f. [popularitas, Latin; popularitas, French, from popular.]

1. Gracefulness among the people; state of being favoured by the people.

The last temper of a mind directs good name and fame to the higher, popular and applause, the more depraved, subjection and tyranny. Bacon.

Your mind has been above the wretched oblation of popularity. Dryden.

2. Representation suited to vulgar conception; what affects the vulgar.

The preacher's labour is to make things appear good or evil, which as it may be performed by solid reasons, it may be represented with colours, popularities, and circumstances, which may the ordinary judgment. Bacon.

POR

PORULARY. adv. [from popular.]

1. In a popular manner; so as to please the crowd.

The victor knight
Bareheaded, popularly low had bow'd,
And paid the salutations of the crowd. Dryden.
Influenc'd by the rabble's bloody will,
With thumbs bent back, they popularly kill. Dryden.

2. According to vulgar conception.

Nor can we excuse the duty of our knowledge, if we only bestow those commendatory conceits, which popularly fit to the eminency thereof. Brown.
TO POPULATE. v. n. [from populus, Latin.] To breed people.

When there be great floods of people, which go on to populate, without sort being means of life and sustentation, it is of necessity, that once in an age they discharge a portion of their people upon other nations. Bacon.

POPULATION. n. f. [from populate.] The state of a country with respect to numbers of people.

The population of a kingdom does not exceed the flock of the kingdom, which should maintain them; neither is the population to be reckoned only by number; for a smaller number, that spend more and earn less, do wear out an estate sooner than a greater number, that live lower and gather more. Bacon.

POPULOUS. n. f. [from populous.] Populousness; multitude of people.

How it now conducteth us to populosity, we shall make but little doubt; there are causes of numerosity in any species. Brown.

POPULOUS. adj. [populosus, Lat.] Full of people; numerously inhabited.

A wilderness is populous enough,
So Suffolk had thy heavenly company. Shakespeare.

For the greater part have kept Their station; heav'n, yet populous, retains Number sufficient to possess her realms. Milton.

POPULOUSLY. adv. [from populous.] With much people.

POPULOUSNESS. n. f. [from populous.]

The state of abounding with people.

This will be allowed by any that considers the sacredness, the splendour, the populi of this region, with the ease and facility with which its governed. Temple.

PORCELAIN. n. f. [porcelaine, Fr. said to be derived from poire and cel; because it was believed by Europeans, that the materials of porcelaine were matured under ground one hundred years.]

1. China; china ware; fine dishes, of a middle nature between earth and glass, and therefore semiprecious.

We have burials in several earths, where we put divers cements, as the Chinese do their porcelain. Bacon.

We are not thoroughly resolved concerning porcelaine or china dishes; that according to common belief, they are made of earth, which hath in preparation about a hundred years under ground. Brown.

The fine materials make it work;
Porcelain, by being pure is apt to break. Dryden.

These look like the workmanship of heav'n
This is the porcelain clay of human kind,
And therefore cast into these noble moulds. Dryden.

2. [portulaca, Lat.] A herb. Ansforth.

PORCH. n. f. [porche, Fr. porticus, Lat.]

1. A roof supported by pillars before a door; an entrance.

I had went forth through the porch, and shut
the doors of the parlour. Judges.

Not infants in the porch of life were free,
The sick, the old, that could but hope a day Longer by nature's bounty, not let stay. B. Jonson.

2. A portico; a covered walk.

All this done,
Repair to Pompey's porch, where you shall find us. Shakespeare.

POR

PORCUPINE. n. f. [porc epi, or epic, Fr. porcupino, Italian.]

The porcupine, when full grown, is as large as a moderate pig; there is no other difference between the porcupine of Malacca and that of Europe, but that the former grows to a larger size. Hill.

This tubhorn Cade
Fought so long, till that his thighs with darts
Were almost like a sharp quill'd porcupine. Shakespeare.

Longbearded comets tick,
Like flaming porcupines, to their left sides,
As they would shoot their quills into their hearts. Dryden.

By the black prince of Monomotapa's side were the glancing cat-a-mountain and the quill-darting porcupine. Arbuthnot and Pope.

PORE. n. f. [pore, Fr. poros.]

1. Sprinkle of the skin; passage of perspiration.

Witches, carrying in the air, and transforming themselves into other bodies, by omments, and amoment themselves all over, may justly move a man to think, that these fables are the effects of imagination; for it is certain, that omments do all, it laid on any thing thick, by stopping of the pore, shut in the vapours, and tend them to the head extremely. Bacon.

Why was the fight
To such a tender ball as th' eye confin'd,
So obvious and so easy to be quench'd;
And not, as feeling, through all parts diffus'd,
That the might look at will through every pore? Milton.

2. Any narrow spiracle or passage.

Pores are small interstices between the particles of matter which constitute every body, or between certain aggregates or combinations of them. Quincy.

From veins of valleys milk and nectar broke,
And honey tweeting through the pores of oak. Dryden.

TO PORE. v. n. [poro, is the optick nerve; but I imagine pore to come by corruption from some English word.] To look with great intenseness and care; to examine with great attention.

All delights are vain; but that most vain,
Which with pain purchas'd, doth inherit pain;
As painfully to pore upon a book,
To seek the light of truth, while truth the while Doth silently blind the eyesight. Shakespeare.

A book was writ, call'd Tetrachordon,
The subject new - it walk'd the town a while Numb and good intellects, now seldom pore'd on. Milton.

The eye grows weary, with poring perpetually on the same thing. Dryden.

Let him with pedants hunt for prints in books,
Pore on his life among the lazy common;
Cross old and surely proud in fancy'd knowledge. Rowe.

With sharpen'd sight pale antiquary pore
Th' inscription value, but the rust of time
He hath been poring to loose on Porphyry, that he imagines himself living in the reign of queen Mary. Rowe.

The design is to avoid the imputation of pedantry, to show that they understand even the pore of his life among the lazy common;
Cross old and surely proud in fancy'd knowledge. Rowe.

3. [commonly spoken and written porblind.] Neighted; short-sighted.

Porblind men see best in the dimmest light, and likewise have their sight stronger near at hand, than those that are not porblind, and can read as write smaller letters, for that the light is nearest those that are porblind are thinner and farther in others, and therefore the greater light perisheth them. Pope.

POROUS. n. f. [from poros] Full of pores.

I took off the dressings, and set the trepan on the fractured bone, considering this porous bone below. Wise.

Milton.

Of light the greater part he took, and plac'd In the sun's orb, made porous to receive And drink the liquid light, firm to retain Her gather'd beams; great palace now of light.

Milton.

POROUSNESS. n. f. [from porous.] The quality of having pores; the porous parts.

They will forcibly get into the porousness of it, and pass between part and part, and separate the parts of that thing one from another; as a knife doth a solid substance, by having its thinnest parts pressed into it.

Digby on Boats.

PORPHYRE. n. f. [from πορφύρα; porphyrites, Lat. porphyre, Fr.] Marble of a particular kind.

I like best the porphyry, white or green marble, with a veillar or upper piece of the same.

Peacham.

Consider the red and white colours in porphyry; hinder light but from striking on it, its colours vanish, and produce no such ideas in us; but upon the return of light, it produces these appearances again.

Locke.

PORPOISE. n. f. [porc poisson, Fr.] The Porpus.

And wallowing porpice sport and lord it in the food.

Drayton.

Amphibious animals link the terrestrial and aquatic together; seals live at land and at sea, and porpoises have the warm blood and dentails of a hog.

PORRINGER. n. f. [from porridge.] 1. A Vessel in which broth is eaten.

A small wax candle put in a socket of brads, then set upright in a porringer full of spirit of wine, then set both the candle and spirit of wine on fire, and you shall see the flame of the candle become four times bigger than otherwise, and appear globular. Bacon.

A physician undertakes a woman with sore eyes, who dawbs 'em quite up with ointment, and, while she was in that pickle, carries off a porringer. L'Ejfl.

The porringers, that in a row Hung high, and made a glat'ring show, Were now but leathern buckets rang'd.

Swift.

2. It seems in Shakespeare's time to have been a word of contempt for a headstrong; of which perhaps the first of these passages may show the reason.

Here is the cap your worship did bespeak.—

—Why this was moulded on a porringer.

Taming of the Shrew.

A haberdasher's wife of small wit rail'd upon me, till her pink'd porringer fell off her head. Hens VIII.

fimus thirty years, and would not leave his old mumpfimus for their new mumpfimus. Camden.
PORTCULLIS. } n.f. [portecoullis, Fr. quail PORTCULUSE. } porta clausa.] A sort of machine like a harrow, hung over the gates of a city, to be let down to keep out an enemy.

Over it a fair portcullis hung,
Which to the gate directly did incline,
With comely compass and comp'ure strong,
Neither uncleanly short, nor yet exceeding long.

The cannon against St. Stephen's gate executed so well, that the portcullis and gate were broken, and entry opened into the city. Hagyard 1.

She the huge portcullis high up drew,
Which but herself, not all the Stygian pow'rs
Could once have mov'd. Milton.

Pyrrhus comes, neither men nor walls
The force to sustain, the town portcullis falls. Denham.
The upper eyelid claps down, and is as good a fence as a portcullis against the impetuosity of the enemy. More.

The gates are open'd, the portcullis drawn;
And deluges of armies from the town
Come pouring in. Dryden.

TO PORTCULLIS. v. a. [from the noun.]

A portion to your share would fall! Waller.

Of words they seldom know more than the grammatical construction, unless they are born with a poetical genius, which is a rare portion amongst them. Dryden.

As soon as any good appears to make a part of their portion of happiness, they begin to desire it.

When he considers the temptations of poverty and riches, and how fatally it will affect his happiness to be overcome by them, he will join with Agur in petitioning God for the safer portion of a moderate convenience. Rogers.

One or two faults are easily to be remedied with a very small portion of abilities. Swgt.

3. Part of an inheritance given to a child;
a fortune.

Leave to thy children tumult, strife, and war,
Portions of toil, and legacies of care. Prior.

4. A wife's fortune.

TO PORTION. v. s. [from the noun.]

1. To divide; to parcel.

POR

The gods who portion out
The lots of princes as of private men.

Have put a bar between his hopes and empire. Rome.
Argos the feat of sovereign rule I chose,
Where may Ulysses and his race might reign,
And portion to his tribes the wide domain. Pope.

2. To endow with a fortune.

Him portion'd mounds, apprentic'd orphans blest,
The young who labour, and the old who rest. Pope.

PORTIONER. n. f. [from portion.] One that divides.

PORTLINESS. n. f. [from portly.] Dignity of men; grandeur of demeanour; bulk of personage.

Such pride is praise, such portliness is honour,
That boldness innocence bears in her eyes;
And her fair countenance like a goodly banner Spreads in defiance of all enemies. Spenser.

When subtiltiness combineth with delightfulness, tunels with fineness, fecundities with portli-ness, and curtness with stayedness, how can the language sound other than most full of sweetness?
Camden's Remains.

PORTLY. adj. [from port.]

1. Grand of men.
Rudely thou wrong'st my dear heart's desire,
In finding fault with her too portly pride. Spenser.

Your atrocities with portly tail,
Take signors and rich burghers on the flood,
Or as it were the pageants of the sea,
Do overpeer the petty traffickers. Shakfpeare.

A goodly, portly man and a corpulent;
a cheerful look, a pleasing eye, and a most noble carriage. Shakfpeare.

A portly prince, and goodly to the sight,
He seem'd a son of Anak for his height. Dryden.

2. Bulky; swelling.

Our house little deserves
The scourge of greatness to be used on it;
And that same greatness too, which our own hands
Have help'd to make to portly. Shakfpeare.

PORTMAN. n. f. [port and man.] An inhabitant or burgher, as those of the cinque ports. Diet.

PORTMANTEAU. n. f. [portemanteau, Fr.]
A chest or bag in which clothes are carried.

I desired him to carry one of my portmanteaus;
but he laugh'd, and bid another do it. Speculator.

PORTOISE. n. f. In sea language, a ship is said to ride a portoise, when the rides with her yards struck down to the deck.

Diet.

POURTRAIT. n. f. [portrait, Fr.] A picture drawn after the life.

As this idea of perfection is of little use in portraits, or the resemblances of particular persons, so neither is it in the characters of comedy and tragedy, which are always to be drawn with some speaks of frailty, such as they have been described in history. Dryden.

The figure of his body was strong, proportionable, beautiful; and were his picture well drawn, it must deserve the praise given to the portraits of Raphael. Prior.

If a portrait painter is desirous to raise and improve his subject, he has no other means than by approaching it to a general idea; he leaves out all the minute breaks and peculiarities in the face, and changes the dress from a temporary fashion to one more permanent, which has success to it no ideas of meanness from its being familiar to us.

In portraits, the grace, and, we may add, the likeness, consists more in taking the general air, than in observing the exact similitude of every feature. Reynolds.

TO POURTRAIT. v. a. [portraire, Fr. from the noun.] To draw; to portray. It is perhaps ill copied, and should be written in the following examples portray.

In most exquisite pictures, they show and portrait not only the dainty ligaments or beauty, but also round about shadow the rude thickets and energy elide. Spenser.

Portrait n. f. [from portraire, Fr. from portray.] Picture; painted resemblance.

By the image of my canvas I see
The portraiture of his. Shakespeare

Let some strange mysterious dream,
Wave at his wings in airy stream
Of lively portraiture display'd,
So fly on my eye-lids laid. Milton

Herein was all the portraiture of a hart. Pope
This is the portraiture of our earth, drive a white-out flattery. Barnet

Her wry-mouth'd portraiture
Display'd the latest her counsellors endure. Pope
He delineates and gives us the portraiture of a perfect orator. Baker

TO PORTRAY. v. a. [portraire, Fr.]

1. To paint; to delineate by picture.

The earl of Warwick's ragged staff is yet to be seen portrayed in many places of their church frieze. Carew

Take a tile, and so portray upon it the city
Jerusalem. Eden

Our phoenix queen was there portray'd too bright, Beautey alone could beauty take to fight. Dryden

2. To adorn with pictures.

Various, with bountiful argument portray'd. Milton PO'RTREISS. n. f. [from porter.] A female guardian of a gate.

The portress of hell-gate reply'd. Milton
The shoes put on, our faithful portress
Admits us in to form the fortlets,
While like a cat with walnuts shod,
Stumbling at every step the trod. Swift

PO'RWIGGLE. n. f. A tadpole or young frog not yet fully shaped.

That black and round fulblance began to grow oval, after a while the head, the eyes, the tail to be discernible, and at last to become that which the ancients called gygnus, we a porwiggle or tadpole.
Brown's Vulgar Errors

PO'RY. adj. [poreux, Fr. from pore.] Full of pores.

To the court arriv'd, th' admiring son
Beholds the vaulted roofs of porry stone. Dryden

TO POSE. v. a. [from poser, an old word signifying heaviness or stupefaction, zepose, Saxon. Skinner.]

1. To puzzle; to gravel; to put to a stand or stop.

Learning was pos'd, philosophy was fet,
Sophisters taken in a philosopher's net. Herbert
How God's eternal son should be man's brother, Poseth his proudest intellectual power. Cuthaw
The only remaining question to me I confide is a poseth one. Hammond

As an evidence of human infirmity, I will give instances of our intellectual blindness, not that I design to pose them with these common enigmas of saguetin. Glanville

Particularly in learning of languages, there is least occasion for posing of children. Locke

2. To appole; to interrogate.

She in the presence of others pos'd him and sifted him, thereby to try whether he were indeed the very Duke of York or no. Bacon

PO'SEN. n. f. [from poser.] One that asks questions to try capacities; an examiner.
He that questioneth much, shall learn much;
but let his questions not be troublesome, for that is fit for a poser. Bacon

PO'STERED. adj. [positus, Latin.] It has the appearance of a participle preterit, but it has no verb. Placed; ranged.

That the principle that sets on work these organs is nothing else but the modification of matter, or the natural motion thereof thus, or thus posited or disposed, is most apparently false. Hale

POSITION. n. f. [positio, Fr. positio, Lat.]

1. State of being placed; situation.

Iron having stood long in a window, being thence taken, and by the help of a cork balanced in water, where it may have a free mobility, will bewray a kind of inopportunity did it retain the former position.

They are the happiest regions for fruits, by the excellence of the position of mountains, and the frequency of streams. Temple

Since no one is all, and we have different projects of the same thing, according to our different positions to it, it is not incongruous to try whether and the many not have notions that escaped him.
Locke

By varying the position of the eye, and moving it nearer to or farther from the direct beam of the sun's light, the colour of the sun's reflected light continually varied upon the spectrum as it did upon my eye. Newton

Place our lives in such a position toward the object, or place the object in such a position toward our eye, as may give us the clearest representation of it, for a different position greatly alters the appearance of bodies. Watts' Logick

2. Principle laid down.

Of any offence or in therein committed against God, with what contentment we accuse us, when your own positions are, that the things we observe should every one of them be dearer unto us than ten thousand lives? Hooker

Let not the proof of any positions depend on the positions that follow, but always on those which go before. Watts

3. Advancement of any principle.

A fallacious illustration is to conclude from the position of the antecedent unto the position of the consequent, or the remoteness of the consequent to the remoteness of the antecedent. Brown

4. [In grammar.] The state of a vowel placed before two consonants, as pompous; or a double consonant, as little.

POSITIONAL. adj. [from position.] Respecting position.

The leaves of cataputia or spurge plucked upwards or downwards, performing their operations by purge or vomit, as old wives still do preach, is a strange conceit, ascribing unto plants positional operations. Brown

POSITIVE. adj. [positivus, Lat. positivus, French.]

1. Not negative; capable of being affirmed;
real; absolute.

The power or blossom is a positive good, although the remove of it, to give place to the fruit, be a comparative good. Bacon

It is well and truly said in schools, positum there is nothing positive; but it is a want of that which ought to be, or habit, partly in the nature of man, and partly in the actions of nature. Peckham

Harduz's carries somewhat more of positivum in it than impenetrability, which is negative, and is perhaps more a consequence of solidity, than solidity itself. Locke

Whatever doth or can exist, or be considered as one thing, is positive; and to not only simple ideas and substances, but modes as are positive beings, though the parts, of which they consist, are very often relative one to another. Locke

2. Absolute; particular; direct; not implied.

As for positive words, that he would not bear arms against king Edward's son, though the words seem calm, yet it was a plain and direct over-ruling of the king's title. Bacon

3. Dogmatical; ready to lay down notions with confidence; stubborn in opinion.

I am sometimes doubting, when I might be positive, and sometimes confident out of reason. Lymer
Some positive perishing tops we know,
That, if once wrong, will needs be always so;
But you, with pleasure, own your errors past,
And make each day a critic on the last. Pope

4. Settled by arbitrary appointment.

In laws, that which is natural, budeth universally; that which is positive, not so. Hooker Although no laws but positive be mutable, yet all are not mutable which be positive; positive laws are either permanent or else changeable, according as the matter itself is, concerning which they were made. Hooker

The law is called positive, which is not labred, imprinted, or infused, into the heart of man, by nature or grace; but is imposed by an external mandate of a lawgiver, having authority to command. White

Laws are but positivæ; love's pow'r we see,
Is nature's sanction, and her first decree. Dryden

5. Having the power to enact any law.
Not to consent to the enacting of such a law, which has no view besides the general good, under another law shall at the same time pass, with other view but that of advancing the power of the party alone, what is this but to claim a positive voice, as well as a negative?

6. Certain; assured: as, he was positive as to the fact.

POSITIVELY. adv. [from positive.]

1. Absolutely; by way of direct position.
The good or evil, which is removed, may be effected good or evil comparatively, and not positively or simply. Bacon

2. Not negatively.

It is impossible that any successive duration should be actually and positively minute, or have infinite successions already gone and past. Bentley

3. Certainly; without dubitation.

Give me some breath, some little pause,
Before I positively speak in this. Shakespeare

It was absolutely certain, that this part was positively yours, and could not possibly be written by any other. Dryden

4. Peremptorily; in strong terms.

I would ask any man, that has but once read the bible, whether the whole tenor of the divine be does not positively require humility and meekness to all men. Spenser

POSITIVENESS. n. f. [from positive.]

1. Actuality; not mere negation.
The positiveness of his of communion lies both in the habitude of the will and in the executed action; whereas the positiveness of his of omission in the habitude of the will only. Norris

2. Peremptoriness; confidence.

This peremptoriness is of two sorts; the one a magisterialness in matters of opinion, the other a positiveness in relating matters of fact, in the one we impose upon men's understandings, in the other on their truth. Government of the Tongue

POSITIVITY. n. f. [from positive.] Peremptoriness; confidence. A low word.

Courage and positivity are never more necessary than on such an occasion; but it is good to give some argument with them of real and convincing force, and let it be strongly pronounced too. Watts

POSITIVE. n. f. [positura, Latin.] The manner in which any thing is placed.

Supposing the positive of the party's hand would throw the dice, and supposing all other things which did concur to the production of that cast to be the very positive they were, there is no doubt but in this case the cast is necessary. Brown

PO'SNET. n. f. [from basinet, Fr. Skinner.]
A little basin; a porringer; a skillet.

To make proof of the incorporation of silver and tin in equal quantity, and also whether it yielded toughness more than silver; and again, whether it will endure the ordinary fire, which belongs to chafing dishes, posnets, and such other silver vessels. Jacob

PO'SSE. n. f. [Latin.] An armed power, from posse comitatus, the power of the thiars. A low word.

The posse comitatus, the power of the whole county, is legally committed unto him. Bacon
As if the position that rules, were the posse of the place, and came off with all the posse, the understanding is seized. Locke

TO POSSESS. v. a. [possessus, Lat. possidet, French.]

1. To have as an owner; to be master of to enjoy or occupy actually.

She will not let intruders enter
Where folly now possesses. Shakespeare

Record a gift,
Here in the court, of all he dies possesses,
Unto his son. Shakespeare

2. To seize; to obtain.

The English marched towards the river Eke, intending to possess a hill called Under-Eke.

Huguenot.

3. To give possession or command of any thing; to make master of. It has of before that which is possessed; sometimes anciently with.

Is he yet possessed?

How much you would?

—Ay, ay, three thousand ducats. Shakespeare.

This man, whom hand to hand I flew in fight,

May be possessed with some store of crowns. Shaksf.

This possession us of the most valuable blessing of human life, friendship. Gon of the Tongue

Seem I to thee sufficiently possessed of happiness or not, who am alone

From all eternity? Milton.

Hope to possess chymists and corpulentarians of the advantages to each party, by contederacy between them. Boile.

The intent of this fable is to possess us of a just state of the vanity of these craving appetites. L'Estrange.

Whole houses, of their whole desires possessed.

Are often ruin'd at their own request. Dryden.

Of fortune's favour long possessed,

He was with one fair daughter only blest'd. Dryden.

We possessed ourselves of the kingdom of Naples, the duchy of Milan, and the avenue of France in Italy. Addison.

Endowed with the greatest perfections of nature, and possessed of all the advantages of external condition, Solomon could not find happiness. Prior.

4. To fill with something fixed.

It is of undoubted advantage to possess our minds with an habitual good intention, and to aim all our thoughts, words, and actions at some laudable end. Addison.

Those, under the great officers, know every little cate that is before the great man, and if they are possessed with honest minds, will consider poverty

as a recommendation. Addison.

5. To have power over, as an unclean spirit.

Beware what spirit rages in your breast;

For ten mispard, ten thousand are possessed. Roscom.

Impur'd within, and yet possessed without.

Cleveland.

I think, that the man is possessed.

6. To affect by intestine power.

He's possessed with greatness,

And speaks not to himself, but with a pride that quarrels at self-breath. Shakespeare.

Let not your ears despite my tongue,

Which shall possess them with the heaviliest sound that ever yet they heard. Suylt.

Possess with rumours full of idle dreams,

Not knowing what they fear, but full of fear,

Shakespeare.

What fury, O son,

Possesses thee to bend that mortal dart

Against thy father's head? Milton.

With the rage of all their race possessed,

Stung to the soul the brothers start from rest. Pope.

POSSESSION. n. f. [possession, Fr. possession,

Latin.]

1. The state of owning or having in one's own hands or power; property.

He shall inherit her, and his generation shall hold her in possession. Ecclesiasticus.

In possession such, not only of right,

I call you. Milton.

2. The thing possessed.

Do nothing to lose the best possession of life, that of honour and truth. Temple.

A man has no right over another's life, by his having a property in land and possession. Locke.

3. Madness caused by the internal operation of an unclean spirit.

To POSSESSION. v. a. To invest with property. Obsolete.

Sundry more gentlemen this little hundred pos- session and possession. Carew.

POSSESSOR. n. f. [from possession.]

Master; one that has the power or property of any thing.

They were people, whom having been of old freemen and possessors, the Lacedaemonians had conquered.

Sidney

POSSESSIVE. adj. [possessivus, Lat.] Having possession.

POSSESSOR. n. f. [possessor, Lat. possesseur, Fr.] Owner; master; proprietor.

Thou profoundest hell

Receive thy new possessor. Milton.

A considerable difference lies between the honour of men for natural and acquired excellencies and divine graces, that those having more of human nature in them, the honour doth more directly redound to the possession of them. Stillingfleet.

'Twas the interest of those, who thrust after the possessions of the clergy, to represent the possessors

in as vile colours as they could. Atterbury.

Think of the happiness of the prophets and apostles, saints and martyrs, who are now rejoicing

in the presence of God, and see themselves possessors

of eternal glory. Far-

POSSESSORY. adj. [possessoire, Fr. from possess.] Having possession.

This he detains from the ivy much against his will; for he should be the true possessory lord there-

of. Howel

POSSET. n. f. [posca, Lat.] Milk curdled with wine or any acid.

We'll have a posset at the latter end of a sea-coal fire. Shakespeare.

In came the bridemaids with the posset.

The bridegroom eat in sight. Shakespeare.

I allowed him medicated broths, posset ale, and pearl julep. W. James.

A spicing diet did her health assure;

Or sick, a pepper posset was her cure. Dryden.

The cure of the stone consists in vomiting with posset drink, in which altho roots are boiled.

Ployer.

Increase the milk when it is diminished by the too great use of flesh meats, by gruels and posset

drink. Arbushnot.

To POSSET. v. a. [from the noun.] To turn; to curdle; as milk with acids.

Not used.

Swift as quicksilver it courses through

The natural gates and allies of the body;

And, with a sudden vigour, it doth posset

And curd, like eager droppings into milk,

The thin and wholesome blood. Shakespeare.

POSSIBILITY. n. f. [possibilité, Fr.] The power of being in any manner; the state of being possible.

There is no let, but that as often as those books are read, and need to require, the fate of their differences may expressly be mentioned to bar even all possibility of error. Hooker.

Brother, speak with possibilities.

And do not break into these worst extremes Shaksf.

When we have for the proof of any thing some of the highest kinds of evidence, in this case it is not the suggestion of a mere possibility that the thing may be otherwise, that ought to be any fullcient cause of doubting. Wilkins.

Consider him antecedently to his creation, while he yet lay in the barren womb of nothing, and only in the number of possibilities; and consequently could have nothing to recommend him to Christ's affection. South.

A bare possibility, that a thing may be or not be,

is no just cause of doubting whether a thing be or not. Tillotson.

According to the multifariousness of this notability, so are the possibilities of being. Norris.

Example not only teaches us our duty, but convinces us of the possibility of our imitation. Rogers.

POSSIBLE. adj. [possible, Fr. possibilis,

Lat.] Having the power to be or to be done; not contrary to the nature of things.

Admit all these impossibilities and great absurdities to be possible and convenient. Whigg.

With men this is impossible, but with God all things are possible. Matthew.

All things are possible to him that believeth. Mark.

Thus we submit, but possible to swerve. Milton.

He must not stay within doors, for fear the house should fall upon him, for that is possible: nor must he go out, lest the next man that meets him should kill him, for that is also possible. Wilkins.

It will scarce seem possible, that God should engrave principles in men's minds in words of uncertain signification. Locke.

Set a pleasure tempting, and the hand of the Almighty visibly prepared to take vengeance, and tell whether it be possible for people wantonly to offend against the law. Locke.

POSSIBLY. adv. [from possible.]

1. By any power really existing.

Within the compass of which laws, we do not only comprehend whatsoever may be easily known to belong to the duty of all men, but even whatsoever may possibly be known to be of that quality. Hooker.

Can we possibly his love desert?

Milton.

2. Perhaps; without absurdity.

Possibly he might be found in the hands of the earl of Essex, but he would be dead first Clarendon.

Arbitrary power tends to make a man a mad sovereign, who might possibly have been a good one, had he been invested with an authority circumscribed by laws. Addison.

POST. n. f. [post, Fr. equus postis cursor.]

1. A hasty messenger; a courier who comes and goes at stated times; commonly a letter carrier.

In certain places there be always fresh posts to carry that farther which is brought unto them by the other. Abbot.

Thou'lt rake up, the post unqualified

Of monstrous lechers. Shakespeare.

I fear my Julia would not design my lues,

Receiving them by such a worthless post. Shaksf.

A cripple in the way out-travels a footman, or a post out of the way. Ben Jonson.

I send you the fair copy of the poem on dulcific, which I should not care to hazard by the common post. Pope.

2. Quick course or manner of travelling.

This is the sense in which it is taken; but the expression seems elliptical: to ride post, is to ride as a post, or to ride in the manner of a post; courir en poste; whence Shakespeare, to ride in post.

I brought my master news of Juliet's death,

And then in post he came from Mantua

To this late monument. Romeo and Juliet.

Sent from Meina post to Egypt. Milton.

He who rides post through an unknown country, can distinguish the situation of places. Dryden.

3. [poste, Fr. from positus, Lat.] Situation; tent.

The waterwise every where upon the surface of the earth, which new post, when they had once seized on, they would never quit. Burnet.

4. Military station.

See before the gate what stalking ghost

Commands the guard, what sentries keep the post?

Dryden.

As I watch'd the gates,

Lodg'd on my post, a herald is arriv'd

From Cæsar's camp. Addison.

Whatever spirit, carelets of his charge,

His post neglects, or leaves the bar at large,

Shall feel sharp vengeance. Pope.

Each of the Grecian captains he represents conquering a single Trojan, while Diomed encounters two at once, and when they are engaged, each in his utmost post, he only is drawn fighting in every quarter. Pope.

5. Place; employment; office.

Every man has his post assign'd to him, and in that station he is well, if he can but think himself so.

L'Estrange.

Fallie men are not to be taken into confidence,

nor fearful men into a post that requires resolution.

L'Estrange.

Without letters a man can never be qualified for any considerable post in the camp; for courage and corporal force, unless joined with conduct, the usual effects of contemplation, are no more fit to command than a tempest. Cæsar.

While you, my lord, the rural shades admire,
And from Britannia's publick posts retire,
Me into foreign realms my late conveyers. Addison.
Certain laws, by sufferers thought unjust,
Deny'd all profit of profit or of trust. Pope.

Many thousands there are, who determine the office or madness of national administrators, whom neither God nor men ever qualified for such a post of judgment. Watts.

6. [postis, Lat.] A piece of timber set erect.

The blood they shall strike on the two side posts and upper posts of the house. Ezra.

For trees, cyresses, and cedars being, by a kind of natural rigour, inflexible downwards, are thereby fitted for posts or pillars. Watson.

Post is equivocal, it is a piece of timber, or a swift messenger. Watts.

To POST. v. n. [postier, Fr. from the noun.]
To travel with speed.

I posted day and night to meet you. Shakespeare.

Will you presently take horse with him,
And will all speed post with him toward the north? Shakespeare.

Post speedily to my lord, your husband,
Shew him this letter. Shakespeare.

Molt wicked speed, to post
With such dexterity to incestuous sheets Shakespeare.

Then this, then that man's aid, they crave,
implore;

Post here for help, seek there their followers. Daniel.

The Turkish messenger presently took horse, which was there in readiness for him, and posted towards Constantinople with as much speed as he could. Kneller.

Themistocles made Xerxes post space out of Greece, by giving out that the Grecians had a purpose to break his bridge of ships athwart the Hellespont. Bacon.

Thousands at his bidding speed,
And post o'er land and ocean without rest. Milton.

With songs and dance we celebrate the day;
At other times we reign by night alone,
And posting through the skies pursue the moon. Dryden.

No wonder that pastorals are fallen into disesteem;
I see the reader already uneasy at this part of Virgil, counting the pages, and posting to the Æneis, Wolfe.

This only object of my real care,
In some few posting fatal hours is hurl'd From wealth, from power, from love, and from the world. Prior.

To POST. v. a.

1. To fix opprobriously on posts.

Many gentlemen, for their integrity in their votes, were, by posting their names, exposed to the popular calumny and fury. King Charles.

On pain of being posted to your sorrow,
Fail not, at four, to meet me. Granville.

In wine and meats she flow'd above the banks, And an excess exceeded her own night, In sumptuous tire she joy'd heretofore to prance, But of her love too lavish.

These are tribunes of the people, The tongues of th' common mouth: I despise these

For they do prank them in authority,
Against all noble influence. Shakespeare.

Your high self,
The gracious mark of th' land, you have obscur'd
With a swain's wearing; and me, poor lowly maid,
Most goddess-like prank'd up. Shakespeare.
'Tis that miracle, and queen of gems,
That nature pranks, her mind attracts my soul. Shakespeare.

I had not unlock'd my lips
In this unallow'd air, but that this jugler
Would think to charm my judgment as mine eyes,
Obtruding false rules, prank'd in reason's garb. Milton.

PRAYER. n. f. [priere, French.]

1. Petition to heaven.
They did say their prayers, and prayed them
Again to sleep. Shakespeare.

O remember God!
O hear her prayer for them as now for Shaks.
My heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved. Romans.

Unreasonable and absurd ways of life, whether in labour or diversion, whether they consume our or our money, are like unreasonable and absurd prayers, and are as truly an offence to God. Locke.

2. Mode of petition.
The solemn worship of God and Christ is prayer, in many congregations, and instead thereof, an indisposed form and conception of external prayer is used. White.

Were he as famous and as bold in war,
As he is timid for mildness, peace, and prayer. Shakespeare.

4. Single formula of petition.
He tell to his devotion on that behalf, and made those two excellent prayers which were published immediately after his death. Felt.

So is now his old Inutterable, which the spirit of prayer inspired. Milton.

No man can always have the same spiritual pleasure in his prayers, for the greatest faint have sometimes the excitement of the heart, sometimes are fervent, sometimes they feel a barrenness of devotion; for this spirit comes and goes. Taylor.

5. Enticely; submissive importunity.
Prayer among us has supposed a more prayer than any the person to whom we pray; but prayer to God doth not change him, but lets us to receive the things prayed for. Stillingfleet.

PRAYERBOOK. n. f. [prayer and book.]
Book of public or private devotion.

Get a prayerbook in your hand,
And stand between two churchmen;
For on that ground I'll build a holy edifice. Sh. 11.

I know not the names or number of the family when prayer reigns, farther than the prayerbook informs me. Locke.

PRE. [pra, Lat.] A particle which, pre-fix'd to words derived from the Latin marks priority of time or rank.

TO PREACH. v. n. [predico, Lat. predicari, Fr.] To pronounce a public discourse upon sacred subjects.

From that time preach began to preach. Matthew.
Prophets preach of the new testament. John.
It is evident in the apostle preaching at Jerusalem and elsewhere, that the first ground of the tract of Christ to them, and the doctrine of redemption, whole multitude of the saints, and came in. Locke.

Divinity would not pass the yard in bloom, the forge of steel, nor preach to be taken in a castle.

PREACH. v. a. [from prædicare, Lat.] To preach; to deliver a sermon. Hooker.
 The shape of our cathedral is not proper for our preaching audience, but rather the figure of an amphitheatre with galleries. Ground.

1. To proclaim or publish in religious orations.
 The Jews of Thence had knowledge, that the word of God was preached of Paul. Acts.
 He decreed to commissionate messengers to preach this covenant to all mankind. Hummond.
2. To inculcate publicly; to teach with earnestness.

There is not any thing positively notified, but we may properly say it is preached. Hooker.
 He oft to them preach'd. Milton.
 Conscience and repentance.
 Can they preach an equality of birth,
 And bid us low we all began from earth? Dryden.
 Among the rest, the rich Galeus lies,
 A good old man while peace he preach'd in vain,
 Amidst the madness of th' unruly train. Dryden.

PREACH. n. f. [prædicatio, Fr. from the verb.] A discourse; a religious oration. Not in use.
 This oversight occasioned the French spitefully to term religion that sort exercised, a mere preach. Hooker.

PREACHER. n. f. [prædicator, Fr. from prædicare.] One who discourses publicly upon religious subjects.

The Lord gave the word; great was the company of the preachers. Psalms.
 You may hear the found of a preacher's voice, when you cannot distinguish what he saith. Bacon.
 Here lies a truly honest man,
 One of those few that in this town
 Honour all preachers; hear their own. Crafford.
2. One who inculcates any thing with earnestness and vehemence.

No preacher is listened to but Time, which gives us the sure train of thought, that elder people have tried in vain to put into our heads before. Swift.
PREACHMENT. n. f. [from prædicare.] A sermon mentioned in contempt; a discourse affectedly solemn.

Was't you, that revell'd in our parliament,
 And made a preachment of your high descent?
 All this is but a preachment upon the text. Shakspeare.

L'Estrange.

PREAMBLE. n. f. [præambulum, Fr.] Something previous; introduction; preface.
 How were it possible that the church should any way else with such ease and certainty provide, that none of her children may, as Adam, dissemble that wretchedness, the penitent confession whereof is so necessary a preamble, especially to common prayer? Hooker.

Truth as in this we do not violate, so neither is the same gain-sayed or crossed, no not in those very preambles placed before certain readings, wherein the steps of the Latin service book have been somewhat too nearly followed. Hooker.

Doors shut, visits forbidden, and divers contractions with the queen, all preambles of ruin, though now and then he did wring out some petty contentments. Wotton.

This preamble to that history was not improper for this relation. Clarendon.

With preambles sweet
 Of charming sympathy, they introduce
 Their sacred song, and when raptures high. Milton.
 I will not detain you with a long preamble. Dryden.

PREAMBULARY. } adj. [from preamble.]
PREAMBULOUS. } Previous. Not in use, though not inelegant.

He not only undermineth the base of religion, but destroyeth the principle preambles unto all belief, and puts upon us the remotest error from truth. Brown.

PREAPPREHENSION. n. f. [pre and apprehend.] An opinion formed before examination.

A conceit not to be made out by ordinary eyes, but such as regarding the clouds, beheld them in shapes conformable to preapprehensions. Brown.

PREASE. n. f. Prese; crowd. Spenser. See PRESS. Obsolete.

A ship into the sacred seas,
 New-built, now launch we; and from out our prease
 Chuse two and fifty youths. Chapman.

PRA'ING. part. adj. Crowding. Spenser.

PRE'BEND. n. f. [præbenda, low Lat. prebende, French.]

1. A stipend granted in cathedral churches.
 His excellency gave the doctor a prebend in St. Patrick's cathedral. Swift.
2. Sometimes, but improperly, a stipendiary of a cathedral; a prebendary.
 Deans and canons, or prebends of cathedral churches, in their first institution, were of great use, to be of counsel with the bishop. Bacon.

PRE'BENDARY. n. f. [prebendarius, Lat.] A stipendiary of a cathedral.

To him, to principals, to prebendaries. Spenser.
 I bequeath to the reverend Mr. Gratian, prebendary of St. Audeon's, my gold bottle-crow. Swift.

PRECA'RIOUS. adj. [precarious, Latin; precaire, French.] Dependent; uncertain, because depending on the will of another; held by courtesy; changeable or alienable at the pleasure of another. No word is more unskillfully used than this with its derivatives. It is used for uncertain in all its senses; but it only means uncertain, as dependent on others: thus there are authors who mention the precariousness of an account, of the weather, of a die.

What subjects will precarious kings regard?
 A beggar speaks too softly to be heard. Dryden.
 Those who live under an arbitrary tyrannical power, have no other law but the will of their prince, and consequently no privileges but what are precarious. Addison.

This little happiness is so very precarious, that it wholly depends on the will of others. Spectator.
 He who rejoices in the strength and beauty of youth, should consider by how precarious a tenure he holds these advantages, that a thousand accidents may before the next dawn lay all his glories in the dust. Rogers.

PRECA'RIOUSLY. adv. [from precarious.] Uncertainly by dependence; dependently; at the pleasure of others.

If one society cannot meet or convene together, without the leave or licence of the other society; nor treat or enact any thing relative to their own society, without the leave and authority of the other; then is that society, in a manner, dissolved, and subsists precariously upon the mere will and pleasure of the other. Lefley.

Our scene precariously subsists too long
 On French translation and Italian song;
 Dare to have sense yourselves; assert the stage,
 Be jolly war'm'd with your own native rage. Pope.

PRECA'RIOUSNESS. n. f. [from precarious.] Uncertainty; dependence on others. The following passage from a book, otherwise elegantly written, affords an example of the impropriety mentioned at the word precarious.

Most consumptive people die of the discharge they spit up, which, with the precariousness of the symptoms of an oppressed diaphragm from a mere lodgment of extravasated matter, render the operation but little advisable. Sharp.

PRECAUTION. n. f. [precautio, Fr. from precautus, Lat.] Preventive caution; preventive measures.

Unless our ministers have strong assurances of a falling in with the grand alliance, or not oppose it, they cannot be too circumspect and speedy in taking their precautions against any contrary resolution. Addison.

TO PRECAUTION. v. a. [precautioner, Fr. from the noun.] To warn beforehand.

By the disgraces, diseases and beggary of hopeful young men brought to ruin, he may be precautioned. Locke.

PRECEDA'NEOUS. adj. [This word is, I believe, mistaken by the author for prædancous; prædancous, Latin, cut or luan before. Nor is it used here in its proper sense.] Previous; antecedent.

That priority of particles of simple matter, which of the heavens and preparation of matter might be antecedent and prædancous, not only in order, but in time, to their ordinary productions. Hale.

TO PRECEDE. v. a. [præcedo, Lat. preceder, French.]

1. To go before in order of time.
 How are we happy, still in fear of harm,
 But harm precedes not sin. Milton.

Amus and Pelagius durst provoke,
 To what the centuries preceding spoke. Dryden.

The ruin of a state is generally preceded by a universal degeneracy of manners and contempt of religion. Swift.

2. To go before according to the adjustment of rank.

PRECEDENCE. } n. f. [from præcedo, PRECEDENCY. } Latin.]

1. The act or state of going before; priority.

2. Something going before; something past. Not used.

I do not like, but yet it does allay
 The good precedence.
 It is an epilogue of discourse, to make plain
 Some obscure precedence that hath tofore been said. Shakspeare.

3. Adjustment of place.
 Among the laws touching precedence in Justinian divers are, that have not yet been so received every where by custom. Selden.

The constable and marshal had cognizance touching the rights of place and precedence. Hale.

4. The foremost place in ceremony.

None sure will claim in hell
 Precedence; none, whose portion is small
 Of present pain, that with ambitious mind
 Will covet more. Milton.

The royal olive accompanied him with all his court, and always gave him the precedence. Hume.

That person hardly will be found,
 With gracious form and equal virtue crown'd;
 Yet if another could precedence claim,
 My fixt desires could find no fairer aim. Dryden.

5. Superiority.

Books will furnish him, and give him light as precedence enough to go before a young fellow. Locke.

Being distracted with different desires, the inquiry will be, which of them has the precedence in determining the will to the next action. Locke.

PRECEDE'NT. adj. [præcedens, Fr. præcedens, Lat.] Former; going before.

Do it at once,
 Or thy precedent signifies are all. Shakspeare.

But accidents unpurpos'd.
 Our own precedent passions do instruct us.
 What levity's in youth. Shakspeare.

When you work by the imagination of what it is necessary that he, by whom you work, have precedent opinion of you, that you can do great things. Bacon.

Hippocrates, in his prognosticks, doth make his observations of the diseases that ensue upon the nature of the precedent four seasons of the year. Bacon.

The world, or any part thereof, could not precedents to the creation of man. Bacon.

Truths, absolutely necessary to salvation, are so clearly revealed, that we cannot err in them, unless we be notoriously wanting to ourselves; herein the fault of the judgment is resolved into a precedent fault in the will. South.

PRECEDENT. n. f. [The adjective has the accent on the second syllable, the substantive on the first.] Any thing that is a rule or example to future times; any thing done before of the same kind.

Examples for cases call but direct as precedents only. Hooker.

Eleven hours I've spent to write it over, The precedent was full as long a doing. Shakspere.
No pow'r in Venice

Can alter a decree establish'd:
'Twill be recorded for a precedent;
And many an error, by the same example,
Will rush into the state. Shakspere.

God, in the administration of his justice, is not tied to precedents, and we cannot argue, that the providences of God towards other nations shall be conformable to his dealings with the people of Israel. Tillotson.

Such precedents are numberless; we draw Our right from custom; custom is a law. Granville.

PRECEDENTLY. adv. [from precedent, adj.] Beforehand.

PRECEP'TOR. n. f. [præceptor, Lat. præceptor, Fr.] He that leads the choir.

Follow this preceptor of ours, in blessing and magnifying that God of all grace, and never yielding to those enemies, which he died to give us power to resist and overcome. Hammond.

PRECEPT. n. f. [precept, Fr. præceptum, Lat.] A rule authoritatively given; a mandate; a commandment; a direction. The custom of lessons furnishes the very simplest and rudest sort with infallible axioms and precepts of sacred truth, delivered even in the very letter of the law of God. Hooker.

'Tis sufficient, that painting be acknowledged for an art; for it follows that no arts are without their precepts. Dryden.

A precept or commandment consists in, and has respect to, some moral point of doctrine, viz. such as concerns our manners, and our inward and outward good behaviour. Ayliffe.

Can counsel, and give comfort to that grief Which they themselves not feel; but tasting it, Their counsel turns to passion, which before Would give preceptual medicine to rage; Fetter strong madness in a silken thread, Charm each with air, and agony with words. Shakspere.

PRECEPTIVE. adj. [preceptivus, Latin; from precept.] Containing precepts; giving precepts.

The ritual, the preceptive, the prophetick, and all other parts of sacred writ, were most sedulously, most religiously guarded by them. Government of the Tongue.

As the precepts part enjoins the most exact virtue, so is it most advantageously enforced by the promissory, which, in respect of the rewards, and the manner of proposing them, is adapted to the same end. Decay of Piety.

The lesson given us here, is preceptive to us not to do any thing but upon due consideration. L'Estrange.

PRECEPTOR. n. f. [præceptor, Latin; præcepteur, French.] A teacher; a tutor. Passionate chiding carries rough language with it, and the names that parents and preceptors give children, they will not be ashamed to bestow on others. Locke.

It was to thee, great Stagyrta, unknown, And thy preceptor of divine renown. Blackmore.

PRECEDITION. n. f. [from præcedo, præcessus, Lat.] The act of going before.

VOL. II.

PRECINCT. n. f. [præcinctus, Lat.] Outward limit; boundary.

The main body of the sea being one, yet within divers precincts, hath divers names; so the catholic church is in like sort divided into a number of distinct societies. Hooker.

This is the manner of God's dealing with those that have lived within the precincts of the church; they shall be condemned for the very want of true faith and repentance. Perkins.

Through all restraint broke loose, he wings his way

Not far off heav'n, in the precincts of light, Directly towards the new created world. Milton.

PRECIOUS. n. f. [from pretiosus, Lat.]

1. Value; preciousness.

2. Any thing of high price. Not used in either sense.

The index or forefinger was too naked whereto to commit their preciousities, and hath the tuition of the thumb scarce unto the second joint. Brown.

Barbarians seem to exceed them in the curiosity of their application of these preciousities. Marc.

PRECIOUS. adj. [precieus, Fr. pretiosus, Lat.]

1. Valuable; being of great worth.

Many things, which are most precious, are neglected, only because the value of them lieth hid. Hooker.

Why in that rawness left you wife and children, Those precious motives, those strong knots of love, Without leave taking? Shakspere.

I never saw Such precious deeds in one that promis'd nought But beggary and poor luck. Shakspere.

These virtues are the hidden beauties of a soul, which make it lovely and precious in his sight, from whom no secrets are concealed. Spectator.

2. Costly; of great price: as, a precious stone.

Let none admire That riches grow in hell; that soil may best Deserve the precious bane. Milton.

3. Worthless. An epithet of contempt or irony.

More of the same kind, concerning these precious faunts amongst the Turks, may be seen in Pietro della Valle. Locke.

PRECIOUSLY. adv. [from precious.]

1. Valuably; to a great price.

2. Contemptibly. In irony.

PRECIOUSNESS. n. f. [from precious.] Valuableness; worth; price. Its preciousness equalled the price of pearls. Wilkins.

PRECIPICE. n. f. [præcipitium, Lat. præcipice, Fr.] A headlong steep; a fall perpendicular without gradual declivity.

You take a precipice for no leap of danger, And woo your own destruction. Shakspere.

Where the water dasheth more against the bottom, there it moveth more swiftly and more in precipice; for in the breaking of the waves there is ever a precipice. Bacon.

I ere long that precipice must tread, Whence none return, that leads unto the dead. Sandys.

No stupendous precipice denies Access, no horror turns away our eyes. Denham.

Swift down the precipice of time it goes, And sinks in minutes, which in ages rose. Dryden.

His generous mind the fair ideas drew Of fame and honour, which in dangers lay;

Where wealth, like fruit, on precipices grew, Not to be gather'd but by birds of prey. Dryden.

Drink as much as you can get; because a good coachman never drives so well as when he is drunk; and then show your skill, by driving to an inch by a precipice. Swift.

PRECIPITANCE. } n. f. [from precipitant.] PRECIPITANCY. } Rash haste; headlong hurry.

Thither they haste with glad precipitance. Milton.

'Tis not likely that one of a thousand such precipitancies should be crowned with so unexpected an issue. Glennville.

As the chymist, by catching at it too soon, loit the philosophical elixir, so precipitancy of our understanding is an occasion of error. Glennville.

We apply present remedies according unto indications, respecting rather the acuteness of disease and precipitancy of occasion, than the rising or setting of stars. Brown.

Hurried on by the precipitancy of youth, I took this opportunity to send a letter to the secretary. Swift.

A rashness and precipitance of judgment, and hastiness to believe something on one side or the other, plunges us into many errors. Botta.

PRECIPITANT. adj. [præcipitans, Lat.]

1. Falling or rushing headlong.

Without longer pause, Downright into the world's first region throws His slight precipitant. Milton.

The birds herdless while they strain Their tuneful throats, the tow'ring heavy lead O'ertakes their speed; they leave their little lives Above the clouds, precipitant to earth. Philips.

2. Hasty; urged with violent haste.

Should he return, that troop to blithe and bold, Precipitant in fear, would wing their flight, And curse their cumbrous pride's unwieldy weight. Pope.

3. Rashly hurried.

The commotions in Ireland were so sudden and so violent, that it was hard to discern the rise, or apply a remedy to that precipitant rebellion. King Charles.

PRECIPITANTLY. adv. [from precipitant.] In headlong haste; in a tumultuous hurry.

TO PRECIPITATE. v. a. [præcipito, Lat. precipiter, Fr. in all the senses.]

She had a king to her son-in-law, yet was, upon dark and unknown reasons, precipitated and banished the world into a nunnery. Bacon.

The vengeance Precipitate thee with augmented pain. Milton.

They were wont, upon a superstition, to precipitate a man from some high cliff into the sea, tying about him with strings many great fowls. Wilkins.

The goddess guides her son, and turns him from the light, Herself involv'd in clouds, precipitates her flight. Dryden.

2. To urge on violently.

The virgin from the ground Upstarting fresh, already clos'd the wound, Precipitates her flight. Dryden.

3. To hasten unexpectedly.

Short intermittent and swift recurrent fits do precipitate patients into consumptions. Harey.

4. To hurry blindly or rashly.

As for having them obnoxious to ruin, if they be of fearful natures, it may do well, but if they be daring, it may precipitate their designs, and prove dangerous. Bacon.

Dear Erythra, let not such blind fury Precipitate your thoughts, nor let them working, Till time shall lend them better means

Than lost complaints. Denham.

5. To throw to the bottom. A term of chymistry opposed to sublime.

Gold endures a vehement fire long without any liqueur, and after it has been divided by corrosive humors into invisible parts, yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear again in its own form. Grew.

TO PRECIPITATE. v. n.

1. To fall headlong.

Hadst thou been taught but gold's true feathers, So many fathom down precipitating, Thou'dst siver like an egg. Shakspere.

2. To fall to the bottom as a sediment in chymistry.

By strong water every metal will precipitate. Bacon.

3. To hasten without just preparation.

Neither did the rebels spoil the country, neither on the other side did their forces increase, which might have led him to precipitate and assail them. Bacon.

PRECIPITATE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Steeply falling.

Barcebus faith, it was necessary this paradise should be set at such a height, because the four rivers, had they not fallen so precipitate, could not have had sufficient force to thrust themselves under the great ocean. Raleigh.

When the full stores their ancient bounds did drain, Precipitate the furious torrent flows;

In vain would speed avoid, of strength oppose. Prior.

2. Headlong; hasty; rashly hasty.

The archbishop, too precipitate in pressing the reception of that which he thought a reformation, paid dearly for it. Clarendon.

3. Hasty; violent.

Mr. Gay died of a mortification of the bowels; was the most precipitate case I ever knew, having cut him off in three days. Arbuthnot.

PRECIPITATE. n.f. A corrosive medicine made by precipitating mercury.

As the elixir separated, I rubbed the super-exercise with the vitriol stone, or sprinkled it with precipitate. Wijman.

PRECIPITATELY. adv. [from precipitate.]

1. Headlong; steeply down.

2. Hastily; in blind hurry.

It may happen to those who vent pride or confidence too precipitately, as it did to an English poet, who celebrated a nobleman for erecting Dryden's monument, upon a promise which he forgot, till it was done by another. Swift.

Not so bold Arnall; with a weight of scull Furious he sinks, precipitately dull. Pope.

PRECIPITATION. n.f. [precipitation, Fr. from precipitate.]

1. The act of throwing headlong.

Let them pile ten hills on the Tarpeian rock, That the precipitation might down-stretch Below the beam of light, yet will I still Be this to them. Shakespeare.

2. Violent motion downward.

That could never happen from any other cause than the hurry, precipitation, and rapid motion of the water, returning at the end of the deluge towards the sea. Woodward.

3. Tumultuous hurry; blind haste.

Here is none of the hurry and precipitation, none of the blustering and violence, which must have attended those suppositions changes. Woodward.

4. In chymistry, sublimency: contrary to sublimation.

Separation is wrought by precipitation or sublimation; that is, a calling of the parts up or down, which is a kind of attraction. Bacon.

The precipitation of the vegetative matter, after the deluge, and the burying it in the strata underneath amongst the sand, was to retrench the luxury of the productions of the earth, which had been so ungratefully abused by its former inhabitants. Woodward.

PRECIPITOUS. adj. [precipites, Lat.]

1. Headlong; steep.

Monarchy, together with me, could not but be dashed in pieces by such a precipitous fall as they intended. King Charles.

2. Hasty; sudden.

Though the attempts of some have been precipitous, and their enquiries so audacious as to have lost themselves in attempts above humanity, yet have the enquiries of most defected by the way. Brown.

How precious the time is, how precipitous the occasion, how many things to be done in their just season, after once a ground is in order. Eccles.

3. Rash; hasty.

Thus fram'd for ill, he loos'd our simple hold, Advice unsate, precipitous and bold. Dryden.

PRECISE. adj. [precis, Fr. precisus, Lat.]

1. Exact; strict; nice; having strict and determinate limitations.

Means more durable to preserve the laws of God

from oblivion and corruption grew in use, not without precise direction from God himself. Hooker.

You'll not bear a letter for me; you stand upon your honour; why, thou unconfinable baseness, it is as much as I can do to keep the term of mine honour precise. Shakespeare.

The state hath given you licence to stay on land six weeks, and let it not trouble you if your occasions ask farther time; for the law in this point is not precise. Bacon.

Let us descend from this top

Of speculation; for the hour precise

Exacts our parting. Milton.

In human actions there are no degrees and precise natural limits described, but a latitude is indulged. Taylor.

The reasonings must be precise, though the practice may admit of great latitude. Arbuthnot.

The precise difference between a compound and collective idea is this, that a compound idea unites things of a different kind, but a collective, things of the same kind. Watts.

2. Formal; finical; solemnly and superstitiously exact.

The gallery of the wits in king Charles the Second's reign, upon every thing which they called precise, was carried to so great an extravagance, that it almost put all christianity out of countenance. Addison.

PRECISELY. adv. [from precise.]

1. Exactly; nicely; accurately.

Doth it follow, that all things in the church, from the greatest to the least, are unholy, which the Lord hath not himself precisely instituted? Hooker.

When the Lord had once precisely set down a form of executing that wherein we are to serve him, the fault appereth greater to do that which we are not, than not to do that which we are commanded. Hooker.

It knows,

He cannot so precisely weed this land As his midnights present occasion, His foes are so enrooted with his friends. Shaf.

Where more of these orders than one shall be set in several stories, there must be an exquisite care to place the columns precisely one over another. Wolt.

In his tract my wary feet have slept, His undeclined ways precisely kept. Sandys.

The rule, to find the age of the moon, cannot shew precisely an exact account of the moon, because of the inequality of the motions of the sun and of the moon. Holdr.

Measuring the diameter of the fifth dark circle, I found it the fifth part of an inch precisely. Newton.

2. With superstitious formality; with too much scrupulosity; with troublesome ceremony.

PRECISENESS. n.f. [from precise.] Exactness; rigid nicety.

I will distinguish the cases; though give me leave, in the handling of them, not to sever them with too much preciseness. Bacon.

When you have fixed proper hours for particular studies, keep to them, not with a superstitious preciseness, but with some good degree of a regular constancy. Watts.

PRECISIAN. n.f. [from precise.]

1. One who limits or restrains.

Though love use reason for his precisian, he admits him not for his counsellor. Shakespeare.

2. One who is superstitiously rigorous.

These men, for all the world, like our precisians be, Who for sound crows or faint ties in the window see, Will pluck down all the church. Drayton.

A profane person calls a man of piety a precisian. Watts.

PRECISION. n.f. [precision, Fr.] Exact limitation.

He that thinks of being in general, thinks never of any particular species of being; unless he can think of it with and without precision at the same time. Locke.

I have left out the utmost precisions of fractions in these computations as not necessary; these whole numbers shewing well enough the difference of the value of guineas. Locke.

Learn unable to treat this part more in detail, without sacrificing perspicuity to ornament, without wandering from the precision or breaking the chain of reasoning. Pope.

PRECISIVE. adj. [from precisus, Lat.]

Exactly limiting, by cutting off all that is not absolutely relative to the present purpose.

Precise abstraction is when we consider those things apart, which cannot really exist apart; as when we consider mode, without considering its substance or subject. Watts.

TO PRECLUDE. v. a. [præcludo, Lat.]

To shut out or hinder by some anticipation.

This much will obviate and preclude the objections of our adversaries, that we do not determine the final cause of the systematical parts of the world, merely as they have respect to the exigencies or conveniences of life. Bentley.

If you once allow them such an acceptance of chance, you have precluded yourself from any more reasoning against them. Bentley.

I fear there will be no way left to tell you, that I entirely esteem you; none but that which no bills can preclude, and no king can prevent. Pope.

PRECOCIOUS. adj. [præcocius, Lat. præcoci, Fr.] Ripe before the time.

Many precocious trees, and such as have their spring in the winter, may be found in most parts. Brown.

PRECOCITY. n.f. [from precocious.] Ripeness before the time.

Some impute the cause of his fall to a precocity of spirit and valour in him; and that therefore those infectious southern air did blast him. Howe.

TO PRECOGITE. v. a. [præcogito, Lat.]

To consider or scheme beforehand.

PRECOGNITION. n.f. [præ and cognitio, Lat.] Previous knowledge; antecedent examination.

PRECONCIE. n.f. [pre and conceit.] An opinion previously formed.

A thing in reason impossible, which notwithstanding through their mistaken preconceit, appeared unto them no less certain, than if nature had written it in the very foreheads of all the creatures. Hooker.

TO PRECONCEIVE. v. a. [pre and conceive.]

To form an opinion beforehand; to imagine beforehand.

In a dead plain the way seemeth the longer, because the eye hath preconceived it shorter than the truth; and the frustrations of that maketh it seem so. Bacon.

Fondness of preconceived opinions is not like to render your reports suspect, nor for want of care, defective. Glauville.

The reason why men are so weak in governing is, because most things fall out accidentally, and come not into any compliance with their preconceived ends, but they are forced to comply subsequently. South.

PRECONCEPTION. n.f. [pre and conception.] Opinion previously formed.

Custom with most men prevails more than truth; according to the notions and preconceptions, which it hath formed in our minds, we shape the discourse of reason itself. Hakewill.

PRECONTRACT. n.f. [pre and contract.]

This was formerly accented on the last syllable. A contract previous to another.

He is your husband on a precontract; To bring you thus together, 'tis no sin. Shakespeare.

TO PRECONTRACT. v. a. [pre and contract.] To contract or bargain beforehand.

Some are such as a man cannot make his wife, though he himself be unmarried, because they are already precontracted to some other; or else are in too near a degree of affinity or consanguinity. Arif.

PRECURSE. n.f. [from præcurro, Lat.]

Forerunning.

The like precurs of fierce events,
As harbingers preceding still the fates,
And prologue to the omen coming on,
Have heaven and earth together demonstrated. Shak.

PRECURSOR. n. f. [præcursor, Lat. præcur- sor, Fr.] Forerunner; harbinger.

Joë's lightnings, the precursers
Of dreadful thunder claps, more momentary
Were not. Shakespeare.

This contagion might have been prefigured upon consideration of its precursors, viz. a rude winter, and a close, sulphurous and fiery air. Harvey.

Thomas Burnet played the precursor to the coming of Homer in his Homerides. Pope.

PREDACIOUS. adj. [from præda, Latin.]
Living by prey.

As those are endowed with poison, because they are predacious; so those need it not, because their food is near at hand, and may be obtained without contest. Derham.

PREDAL. adj. [from præda, Lat.] Robbing; practising plunder. This word is not countenanced from analogy.

Sarmatia, laid by predal rapine low,
Mourn'd the hard yoke, and sought relief in vain.
S. Boyse.

PREDATORY. adj. [prædatorius, Lat. from præda, Lat.]

ous.

The evils that come of exercise are, that it maketh
the spirits more hot and predatory. Bacon.

PREDCEASED. adj. [pre and deceased.]
Dead before.

Will you mock at an ancient tradition, began upon an honourable respect, and worn as a memorable trophy of predceased valour? Shakespeare.

PREDCESSOR. n. f. [predecessor, Fr. præ- decessor, Lat.]

1. One that was in any state or place before another.

In these pastoral pastimes, a great many days were spent to follow their flying predcessors. Seduce.

There is cause, why we should be slow and unwilling to change, without very urgent necessity, the ancient ordinances, rites, and approved customs of our venerated predcessors. Hooker.

I feel from partial to my predcessor in the laurel,
the friends of antiquity are not few. Dryden.

The present pope, who is well acquainted with the secret history, and the weakness of his pred- cessor, seems resolved to bring the project to its perfection. Addison.

The more beauteous Cloe fat to thee,
Good Howard, envious of Apples' art;
But happy thou from Cupid's arrow free,
And flames that pierc'd thy predcessor's heart.
Prior.

2. Ancestor.

PREDSTINARIAN. n. f. [from predesti- nate.] One that holds the doctrine of preddestination.

Why does the predstinarian so adventurously climb into heaven, to rank the celestial archives, read God's hidden decrees, when with less labour he may secure an authentick transcript within himself? Decay of Piety.

TO PREDSTINATE. v. a. [predestinare,
Fr. præ and destino, Lat.] To appoint beforehand by irreversible decree.

Some gentleman or other shall scape a predes- tinate freight face. Shakespeare.

Whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate
to be conformed to the image of his son. Romans.

Having preddestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself. Ephesians.

TO PREDSTINATE. v. n. To hold predestination. In ludicrous language.

His rust creak he hears,
And picks up his preddestinating ears. Dryden.

PREDSTINATION. n. f. [preddestination,
Fr. from preddestinate.] Fatal decree;
preordination.

Preddestination we can difference no otherwise from providence and prescience, than this, that prescience only foretells, providence foretells and careth for, and hath respect to all creatures, and preddestination is only of men; and yet not of all to men belonging, but of their salvation properly in the common use of divines; or predation, as some have used it. Raleigh.

Nor can they justly accuse
Their maker, or their making, or their fate;
As if preddestination over-rul'd
Their will, dispos'd by absolute decree,
Or high fore-knowledge. Milton.

PREDSTINATOR. n. f. [from preddestinate.]
One that holds preddestination or the prevalence of pre-established necessity.

Me, mæe example let the flocks use,
Their sad and cruel doctrine to maintain;
Let all preddestinators me produce,
Who struggle with eternal fate in vain. Cowley.

TO PREDSTINE. v. a. [pre and destine.]
To decree beforehand.

Ye careful angels whom eternal fate
Ordains on earth and human acts to wait,
Who turn with secret pow'r this restless ball,
And bid preddestin empires rise and fall. Prior.

PREDSTINATION. n. f. [predetermin- nation, French; pre and determination.]
Determination made beforehand.

This preddestination of God's own will is so far from being the determining of ours, that it is distinctly the contrary; for supposing God to predes- termine that I shall act freely; 'tis certain from thence, that my will is free in respect to God, and not predetermined. Hammond.

The truth of the catholick doctrine of all ages, in points of preddestination and irresistibility, stands in opposition to the Calvinists. Hammond.

TO PREDSTININE. v. a. [pre and deter- mine.] To doom or confine by previous decree.

We see in brutes certain sensible instincts antecedent to their imaginative faculty, whereby they are predetermined to the convenience of the sensible life. Hale.

PREDIAL. adj. [prædium, Lat.] Consisting of farms.

By the civil law, their predial estates are liable to fiscal payments and taxes, as not being appropriated for the service of divine worship, but for profane uses. Ayliffe.

PREDICABLE. adj. [predicable, Fr. præ- dicabilis, Lat.] Such as may be affirmed of something.

PREDICABLE. n. f. [predicabile, Lat.] A logical term, denoting one of the five things which can be affirmed of any thing.

These they call the five predicables, because every thing that is affirmed concerning any being, must be the genus, species, difference, some property or accident. Watts.

PREDICAMENT. n. f. [predicament, Fr.
predicamentum, Lat.]

1. A class or arrangement of beings or substances ranked according to their natures: called also categoria or cate- gory. Harris.

If there were nothing but bodies to be ranked by them in the predicament of place, then that description would be allowed by them as sufficient. Digby.

2. Class or kind described by any definitive marks.

The offender's life lies in the mercy
Of the duke only, 'gainst all other voice;
In which predicament I say thou stand'st. Shaksp.

I show the line and the predicament,
Wherein you range under this subtle king. Shaksp.

PREDICAMENTAL. adj. [from predica- ment.] Relating to predicaments.

PREDICANT. n. f. [predicans, Lat.] One that affirms any thing.

TO PREDICATE. v. a. [predico, Latin.]
To affirm any thing of another thing.

All propositions, wherein a part of the complex idea, which any term stands for, is predicated, of that term, are only verbal; v. g. to say that gold is a metal. Locke.

TO PREDICATE. v. n. To affirm; to comprise an affirmation.

It were a presumption to think, that any thing in any created nature can bear any perfect resemblance of the incomprehensible perfection of the divine nature, very being itself not predicating uni-vocally touching him and any created being. Hab-

PREDICATE. n. f. [predicatum, Latin.] That which is affirmed or denied of the subject; as, man is rational; man is not immortal.

The predicate is that which is affirmed or denied of the subject. Watts.

PREDICATION. n. f. [predicatio, Latin;
from predicare.] Affirmation concerning any thing.

Let us reason from them as well as we can; they are only about identical predications and influence.
Locke.

TO PREDICT. v. a. [prædictus, Latin;
predire, Fr.] To foretel; to foreknow.

He is always inveighing against such unequal distributions; nor does he ever cease to predict public ruins, till his private are repaired.

PREDICTION. n. f. [predictio, Lat. pre- dictio, Fr. from predict.] Prophecy; declaration of something future.

These predictions
Are to the world in general, as to Caesar. Shaksp.
The predictions of cold and long winters, hot and dry summers, are good to be known. Bacon.

How soon hath thy prediction, fear blest!
Measur'd this transient world the race of time,
Till time stand fix'd. Milton.

In Christ they all meet with an irrevocable evidence, as it they were not predictions, but atter-relations; and the penmen of them not prophets but evangelists. South.

He, who prophecy'd the best,
Approves the judgment to the rest;
He'd rather choose that I should die,
Than his prediction prove a lie. Swift.

PREDICTOR. n. f. [from predict.] Fore-teller.

Whether he has not been the cause of this poor man's death, as well as the predictor, may be disputed. Swift.

PREDIGESTION. n. f. [pre and digestion.]
Digestion too soon performed.

Predigestion, or hasty digestion, fill the body full of crudities and seeds of diseases. Bacon.

TO PREDISPOSE. v. a. [pre and disposi- tion.] To adapt previously to any certain purpose.

Vegetable productions require heat of the sun,
to predispose, and excite the earth and the seeds.
Barrow.

Unless nature be predisposed to friendship by its own propensity, no arts of obligation shall be able to abate the secret hatred of some persons towards others. South.

PREDISPOSITION. n. f. [pre and disposi- tion.] Previous adaptation to any certain purpose.

The disease was conceived to proceed from a malignity in the constitution of the air, gathered by the predisposition of season. Barrow.

Tunes and airs have in themselves some affinity with the affections; so as it is no marvel if they alter the spirits, considering that tunes have a pre- disposition to the motion of the spirits. Bacon.

External accidents are often the occasional cause of the king's evil; but they suppose a predisposition of the body. Watts.

PREDOMINANCE. n. f. [præ and domina, PREDOMINANCY. Lat.] Prevalence; superiority; ascendancy; superiour influence.

We make guilty of our disasters, the sun, the moon, and the stars, as if we were knaves, thieves, and treacherous by spherical predominance. Shakf.

An inflammation consists only of a sanguineous affluxion, or efflu is denominated from other humours, according to the predominancy of melancholy, phlegm, or choler. Brown.

In human bodies, there is an incessant warfare amongst the humours for predominancy. Hewel.

The true cause of the Pharisees disbelief of Christ's doctrine, was the predominance of their covetousness and ambition over their will. South.

The several rays in white light do retain their colorific qualities, by which those of any sort, whenever they become more copious than the rest, do, by their excess and predominance, cause their proper colour to appear. Newton.

PREDOMINANT. adj. [predominant, Fr.
præ and dominor, Latin.] Prevalent;
supreme in influence; ascendant.

Miserable were the condition of that church, the weighty affairs whereof should be ordered by those deliberations, wherein such an humour as this was predominant. Hooker.

Foul subordination is predominant,
And equity call'd your highness' land. Shakpeare.

It is a planet, that will strike
Where tis predominant; and 'tis powerful. Shakf.

Those helps were overweighed by things that made against him, and were predominant in the king's mind. Bacon.

Whether the sun, predominant in heav'n,
Rule on the earth; or earth rise on the sun. Milton.

I could show you several pieces, where the beauties of this kind are so predominant, that you could never be able to read or understand them. Swift.

TO PREDOMINATE. v. n. [predominer, Fr.
præ and dominor, Lat.] To prevail;
to be ascendant; to be supreme in influence.

So much did love t' her executed lord
Predominate in this fair lady's heart. Daniel.

The gods formed women's souls out of these principles which compose several kinds of animals; and their good or bad disposition arises, according as such and such principles predominate in their constitutions. Addison.

The rays, reflected least obliquely, may predominate over the rest, so much as to cause a heap of such particles to appear very intensely of their colour. Newton's Opticks.

Where judgment is at a loss to determine the choice of a lady who has several lovers, fancy may be the more allowably predominate. Clarissa.

TO PRELECT. v. a. [præ and elc&.] To choose by previous decision.

PREEMINENCE. n. f. [preeminence, Fr.
præ and eminence.] It is sometimes written,
to avoid the junction of er, preheminnence.]

1. Superiority of excellence.

I plead for the preeminence of epic poetry. Dry.
Let profit have the preeminence of honour in the end of poetry; pleasure, though but the second in degree, is the first in favour. Dryden.

It is a greater preheminnence to have life, than to be without it; to have life and sense, than to have life only; to have life, sense, and reason, than to have only life and sense. Wilkins.

The preeminence of christianity to any other religious scheme which preceded it, appears from this, that the most eminent among the Pagan philosophers disclaimed many of those superstitious follies which are condemned by revealed religion. Addison.

2. Precedence; priority of place.

His lance brought him captives to the triumph of Arietta's beauty, such as, though Arietta be amongst the fairest, yet in that company were to have the preeminence. Sidney.

He touched it as a special preeminence of Julius and Andronicus, that in christianity they were his ancestra. Hooker.

I do invest you jointly with my power,
Preeminence, and all the large effects
That troop with majesty. Shakpeare.

The English desired no preeminence, but offered equality both in liberty and privilege, and in ope-nity of offices and employments. Hayward.

Am I distinguish'd from you but by toils,
Superior toils, and heavier weight of cares?
Painful preeminence! Addison.

3. Superiority of power or influence.

That which standeth on record, hath preeminence above that which passeth from hand to hand, and bath no pens but the tongue, no book but the ears of men. Hooker.

Beyond the equator, the southern point of the needle is sovereign, and the north submits his pre-eminence. Brown.

PREEMINENT. adj. [preeminent, Fr. præ
and eminet.] Excellent above others.

Tell how came I here? by some great maker
In goodness and in power preeminent. Milton.

We claim a proper interest above others in the preeminent rights of the household of faith. Spratt.

PREEMPTION. n. f. [praemptio, Latin.]
The right of purchasing before another.

Certain persons, in the reigns of king Edward vi.
and queen Mary, fought to make use of this pre-emption, but, crossed in the prosecution, or defeated in their expectation, gave it over. Carew.

TO PREEN. v. a. [priimen, Dutch, to dress or prank up.] To trim the feathers of birds, to enable them to glide through the air: for this use nature has furnished them with two peculiar glands, which secrete an unctuous matter into a perforated oil bag, out of which the bird draws it with its bill. Bailey.

TO PREENGAGE. v. a. [præ and engage.]

To engage by precedent ties or contracts.
To Cyprius by his friends his suit he mov'd,
But he was preengag'd by former ties. Dryden.

Not only made an instrument;
But preengag'd without my own consent. Dryden.

The world has the unhappy advantage of pre-engaging our passions, at a time when we have not reflection enough to look beyond the instrument to the hand whole direction it obeys. Rogers.

PREENGAGEMENT. n. f. [from preengage.]
Precedent obligation.

My preengagements to other themes were not unknown to those for whom I was to write. Boyle.

The opinions, suited to their respective tempers, will make way to their assent, in spite of accidental preengagements. Glanville.

Men are apt to think, that those obediences they pay to God shall, like a preengagement, disannul all after-contracts made by guilt. Decay of Piety.

As far as opportunity and former preengagements will give leave. Collier.

TO PREESTABLISH. v. a. [præ and establiſh.]
To settle beforehand.

PREESTABLISHMENT. n. f. [from præ- establiſh.] Settlement beforehand.

TO PREEXIST. v. a. [præ and existo. Lat.]
To exist beforehand.

If thy preexisting soul
Was form'd at first with myriads more,
It did through all the mighty poets roll. Dryden.

PREEXISTENCE. n. f. [preexistence, Fr.
from preexist.]

1. Existence before.

Wisdom declares her antiquity and preexistence to all the works of this earth. Burnet.

2. Existence of the soul before its union with the body.

As Simonides has exposed the vicious part of women, from the doctrine of preexistence; some of the ancient philosophers have satirized the vicious part of the human species, from a notion of the soul's postexistence. Addison.

PREEXISTENT. adj. [preexistent, Fr. præ and existent.] Existing beforehand; preceding in existence.

Artificial things could not be from eternity, because they suppose man, by whose art they were made, preexistent to them; the workman must be before the work. Burnet.

Blind to former, as to future fate,
What mortal knows his preexistent state? Pope.

If this preexistent eternity is not compatible with a successive duration, then some being, though infinitely above our finite comprehensions, must have had an identical, invariable continuance from all eternity, which being is no other than God. Bentley.

PREFACE. n. f. [preface, Fr. prefatio, Lat.] Something spoken introductory to the main design; introduction; something proemial.

This superficial tale
Is but a preface to her worthy praise. Shakpeare.

Sir Thomas More betrayed his depth of judgment in state affairs in his Utopia, than which, in the opinion of Budens in a preface before it, our age hath not seen a thing more deep. Peachment.

Heav'n's high behest no preface needs. Milton.
TO PREFACE. v. n. [prefari, Latin. To say something introductory.

Before I enter upon the particular parts of her character, it is necessary to preface, that she is the only child of a decrepid father. Spectator.

TO PREFACE. v. a.

1. To introduce by something proemial.

Wherefo'er he gave an admonition, he prefaced
it always with such demonstrations of tenderness.
Fell.

Thou art rash,
And must be prefac'd into government. Southern.

2. To face; to cover. A ludicrous sense.

I love to wear clothes that are flush,
Not prefacing old rugs with plush. Cleveland.

PREFACER. n. f. [from preface.] The writer of a preface.

If there be not a tolerable line in all these six,
the prefacer gave me no occasion to write better.
Dryden.

PREFATORY. adj. [from preface.] Introductory.

If this proposition, whosoever will be saved, be restrained only to those to whom it was intended, the christians, then the anathema reaches not the heathens, who had never heard of Christ: after all,
I am far from blaming even that prefatory addition to the creed. Dryden.

PREFECT. n. f. [præfectus, Lat.] Gover-nour; commander.

He is much
The better soldier, having been a tribune,
Prefect, lieutenant, prætor in the war. Ben Jonson.

It was the custom in the Roman empire, for the prefects and viceroys of distant provinces to transmit a relation of every thing remarkable in their administration. Addison.

PREFECTURE. n. f. [præfectura, Fr. præ- fectura, Latin.] Command; office of government.

TO PREFER. v. a. [preferer, Fr. prefero.
Latin.]

1. To regard more than another.

With brotherly love, in honour prefer one another. Romans.

2. With above before the thing postponed.

If I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth; if I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy. Psalms.

3. With before.

He that cometh after me, is preferred before me,
for he was before me. John.

It may worthily seem unto you a most shameful thing, to have preferred an infamous peace before a most just war. Knutta.

O spirit, that dost prefer
Before all temples th' upright heart. Milton.

The greater good is to be preferred before the less, and the lesser evil to be endured rather than the greater. Wilkins.

4. With to.

Would he rather leave this frantick scene,
And trees and beasts prefer to courts and men? Finn.

5. To advance; to exalt; to raise.

PRE

By the recommendation of the earl of Dunbar, he was prefer'd to the bishoprick of Coventry and Lichfield. Clarendon.

6. To present ceremoniously. This seems not a proper use.

He spake, and to her hand prefer'd the bowl. Pope.

7. To offer solemnly; to propose publicly; to exhibit.

They flatly disavouch
To yield him more obedience or support;
And as t' a perjurd duke of Lancaster,
Their cartel of defiance they prefer. Daniel.

I, when my soul began to faint,
My vows and prayers to thee prefer'd;
The lord my passionate complaint,
Even from his holy temple, heard. Savids.

Prefer a bill against all kings and parliaments since the conquest; and if that won't do, challenge the crown and the two houses. Collier.

Take care,
Left thou prefer to rash a pray'r;
Nor vainly hope the queen of love
Will e'er thy fav'rite's charms improve. Prior.

Every person within the church or commonwealth may prefer an accusation, that the delinquent may suffer condign punishment. Ayliffe.

PREFERABLE. adj. [preferable, Fr. from prefer.] Eligible before something else.
With to commonly before the thing refused.

The stronger ties we have to an unalterable pursuit of happiness, which is greatest good, the more are we free from any necessary compliance with our desire, set upon any particular, and then appearing preferable good, till we have duly examined it. Locke.

Though it be incumbent on parents to provide for their children, yet this debt to their children does not quite cancel the score due to their parents;
but only is made by nature preferable to it. Locke.

Almost every man in our nation is a politician, and hath a scheme of his own, which he thinks preferable to that of any other. Addison.

Even in such a state as this, the pleasures of virtue would be superior to those of vice, and justly preferable. Atterbury.

PREFERABLENESS. n. f. [from preferable.]
The state of being preferable.

PREFERABLY. adv. [from preferable.] In preference; in such a manner as to prefer one thing to another.

How came he to chuse a comick preferably to the tragic poets; or how comes he to chuse Plautus preferably to Terence? Dennis.

PREFERENCE. n. f. [preference, Fr. from prefer.]

The act of preferring; estimation of one thing above another; election of one rather than another.

It gives as much due to good works, as is consistent with the grace of the gospel; it gives as much preference to divine grace, as is consistent with the precepts of the gospel. Spratt.

Leave the critics on either side, to contend about the preference due to this or that sort of poetry. Dryden.

We find in ourselves a power to begin or forbear several actions of our minds and motions of our bodies, barely by a thought or preference of the mind, ordering the doing, or not doing such a particular action. Locke.

The several musical instruments in the hands of the Apollos, Muses, and Panes, might give light to the dispute for preference between the ancient and modern music. Addison.

A secret pleasure touch'd Athena's soul,
To see the preference due to sacred age Regarded. Pope.

The Romanists were used to value the latter equally with the former, or even to give them the preference. Waterland.

With to before the thing postponed.

This poetica with his soft admirers, and gives him
the preference to Virgil. Dryden.

It directs one, in preference to, or with neglect of the other, and thereby either the continuation or change becomes voluntary. Locke.

3. With above.

I shall give an account of some of those appropriate and discriminating notices wherein the human body differs, and hath preference above the most perfect brutal nature. Hale.

4. With before.

Herein is evident the visible discrimination between the human nature, and its preference before it. Hale.

5. With over.

The knowledge of things alone gives a value to our reasonings, and preference to one man's knowledge over another. Locke.

PREFERMENT. n. f. [from prefer.]

1. Advancement to a higher station.

I'll move the king
To any shape of thy preferment, such As thou'lt desire. Shakespeare.

If you hear of that blind traitor,
Preferment falls on him that cuts him off. Shaksp.
Princes must, by a vigorous exercise of that law, make it every man's interest and honour to cultivate religion and virtue, by rendering vice a disgrace, and the certain run to preferment or pretensions. Swift.

2. A place of honour or profit.

All preferments should be placed upon fit men.

The mercenary and inconstant crew of the hunters after preferment, whose designs are always seen through. Davenant.

3. Preference; act of preferring. Not in use.

All which declare a natural preferment of the one unto the motion before the other. Brown.

PREFERER. n. f. [from prefer.] One who prefers.

TO PREFIGURATE. v. a. [præ and figuro, Lat.] To show by an antecedent representation.

PREFIGURATION. n. f. [from præfigurare.]
Antecedent representation.

The same providence that hath wrought the one,
will work the other; the former being pledges, as well as præfigurations of the latter. Burnet.

The variety of prophecies and præfigurations had their punctual accomplishment in the author of this institution. Norris.

TO PREFIGURE. v. a. [præ and figuro, Lat.] To exhibit by antecedent representation.

What the Old Testament hath, the very same the New containeth; but that which lieth there, is under a shadow, is here brought forth into the open sun; things there præfigured, are here performed.

Such piety, so chaste use of God's day,
That what we turn to feast, the turn'd to pray,
And did præfigure here in devout taste,
The rest of her high sabbath, which shall last. Dunne.

If shame superadded to loss, and both met together, as the sinners portion here, perfectly præfiguring the two saddest ingredients in hell, deprivation of the blissful vision, and confusion of face, cannot prove efficacious to the mortifying of vice, the church doth give over the patient. Hammond.

TO PREFINSE. v. a. [præfinis, Fr. præfinis,
Lat.] To limit beforehand.

He, in his immoderate desires, præfinis unto himself three years, which the great monarchs of Rome could not perform in so many hundreds. Knolles.

TO PREFIX. v. a. [præfixo, Latin.]

1. To appoint beforehand.

At the præfix'd hour of her awaking,
Came I to take her from her kindred's vaults. Shakespeare.

A time præfix, and think of me at last!
Its inundation constantly increaseth the seventh day of June; wherein a larger form of speech were safer, than that which punctually præfixeth
a constant day. Brown.

Booth's forward valour only serv'd to show,
He durst that duty pay we all did owe:

PRE

Th' attempt was fair; but heaven's præfix'd hour
Not came. Dryden.

2. To settle; to establish.

Because I would præfix some certain boundary between them, the old statutes end with king Edward II. the new or later statutes begin with king Edward III. Hale.

These boundaries of species are as man, and not as nature makes them, if there are in nature any such præfix'd bounds. Locke.

3. To put before another thing: as, he præ- fix'd an advertisement to his book.

PREFIX. n. f. [præfixum, Lat.] Some particle put before a word, to vary its signification.

In the Hebrew language the noun has its præfix
and affix, the former to signify some few relations, and the latter to denote the pronouns possessive and relative. Clerke.

It is a præfix of augmentation to many words in that language. Brown.

PREFIXION. n. f. [præfixion, Fr. from præfix.] The act of prefixing.

TO PRÆFORM. v. a. [præ and form.] To form beforehand. Not in use.

If you consider the true cause,
Why all these things change, from their ordinance,
Their natures and præform'd faculties,
To monstrous quality; why you shall find,
That heav'n made them instruments of fear
Unto some monstrous state. Shakespeare.

PREGNANCY. n. f. [from pregnant.]

1. The state of being with young.

The breast is encompassed with ribs, and the belly left free, for respiration; and in females, for that extraordinary extension in the time of their pregnancy. Ray.

2. Fertility; fruitfulness; inventive power;
acuteness.

He was sent to school, where his pregnancy was advantaged by more than paternal care and the duslry. Pell.

Pregnancy is made a tapster, and hath his quick wit waited in giving reckonings. Shakespeare.

This writeth out of the pregnancy of his invention, hath found out an old way of insinuating the grossest reflections under the appearance of admonitions. Swift.

PREGNANT. adj. [pregnant, Fr. præ- gnans, Latin.]

1. Teeming; breeding.

Thou
Dove-like sat'st brooding on the vast abyss,
And mud'st it pregnant. Milton.

His town, as some reports, was built of old
By Danæe, pregnant with almighty gold. Dryden.

Through either ocean, foolish man!
That pregnant word sent forth again,
Might to a world extend each atom there,
For every drop call forth a sea, a heav'n for ev'ry star. Prior.

2. Fruitful; fertile; impregnating.

All these in their pregnant causes mixt. Milton.
Call the floods from high, to rush again,
With pregnant streams, to swell the teeming grain. Dryden.

3. Full of consequence.

These knew not the just motives and pregnant grounds, with which I thought myself furnished. King Charles.

An egregious and pregnant instance how far virtue surpasses ungenerosity. Woodward.
O detestable passive obedience! did I ever imagine I should become thy votary in so pregnant an instance. Arbuthnot.

4. Evident; plain; clear; full. An obsolete sense.

This granted, as it is a most pregnant and unforc'd position, as stands so eminent in the degree of this fortune as 'adio, a knave very valuable! Shakespeare.

Were't not that we stand up against them all,
Twere pregnant, they should square between themselves. Shakespeare.

5. Easy to produce any thing.

P R E

A most poor man made tame to fortune's blows,
Who by the art of known and feeling sorrows,
Am pregnant to good pity. Shakespeare.

6. Free; kind. Obsolete.

My matter hath no voice, but to your own most pregnant and vouchsafed ear. Shakespeare.

PREGNANTLY, adv. [from pregnant.]

1. Fruitfully.

2. Fully; plainly; clearly.

A thousand moral paintings I can show,
That shall demonstrate the quick blows of fortune
More pregnantly than words. Shakespeare.

The dignity of this office among the Jews is so pregnantly set forth in holy writ, that it is unquestionable; kings and priests are mentioned together. South.

PREGUSTATION, n. f. [præ and gusto, Lat.]

The act of tasting before another.

To PREJUDGE, v. a. [prejurer, Fr. præ and judico, Lat.] To determine any question beforehand; generally to condemn beforehand.

If he stood upon his own title of the house of Lancaster, he knew it was condemn'd in parliament, and prejudged in the common opinion of the realm, and that it tended to the dishonour of the line of York. Bacon.

The child was strong and able, though born in the eighth month, which the physicians do pre-judge. Bacon.

The cause is not to be defended, or patronized by names, but arguments, much less to be prejudged, or blatted by them. Hammond.

The committee of council hath prejudged the whole case, by calling the united souls of both houses of parliament an universal clamour. Swift.

Some action ought to be entered, lest a greater cause should be injured and prejudged thereby. Ayliffe.

To PREJUDICATE, v. a. [præ and judico, Latin.] To determine beforehand to disadvantage.

Our dearest friend
Prejudicates the business, and would seem To have us make denial. Shakespeare.

Are you, in favour of his person, bent
Thus to prejudice the innocent? Sandys.

PREJUDICATE, adj. [from the verb.]

1. Formed by prejudice; formed before examination.

This rule of calling away all our former prejudi- cate opinions, is not proposed to any of us to be practised at once as subjects or christians, but merely as philosophers. Watts.

2. Prejudiced; prepossessed by opinions.

Their works will be embraced by most that understand them, and their reasons enforce belief from prejudicate readers. Brown.

PREJUDICATION, n. f. [from prejudicate.]

The act of judging without examination.

PREJUDICE, n. f. [prejudice, Fr. prejudi- cium, Lat.]

1. Prepossession; judgment formed beforehand without examination. It is used for prepossession in favour of any thing or against it. It is sometimes used with to before that which the prejudice is against,
but not properly.

The king himself frequently considered more the person who spoke, as he was in his prejudice, than the counsel itself that was given. Clarendon.

My comfort is, that their manifest prejudice to my cause will render their judgment of less authority. Dryden.

There is an unaccountable prejudice in professors of all kinds, for which reason, when I talk of preaching to fly, silly people think me an owl for my pains. Addison.

2. Mischief; detriment; hurt; injury.
This sense is only accidental or consequential; a bad thing being called a prejudice, only because prejudice is commonly a bad thing, and is not derived from the original or etymology of the word; it were therefore better to use it less: perhaps prejudice ought never to be applied to any mischief, which does not imply some partiality or prepossession.

In some of the following examples, its impropriety will be discovered.

I have not spoke one the least word,

That might be prejudice of her present state,
Or touch of her good person. Shakespeare.

England and France might, through their amity,
Breed him some prejudice; for from this league
Peep'd harms that men's d' hum. Shakespeare.

Factions carried too high and too violently, is a sign of weakness in princes, and much to the prejudice of their authority and business. Bacon.

How plain this abuse is, and what prejudice it does to the understanding of the sacred scriptures. Locke.

A prince of this character will instruct us by his example, to fix the unsteadiness of our politics; or by his conduct hinder it from doing us any prejudice. Addison.

To PREJUDICE, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To prepossess with unexamined opinions; to fill with prejudices.

Half pillars wanted their expected height,
and roofs imperfect prejudic'd the light. Prior.

Suffer not any beloved study to prejudice your mind, so far as to despise all other learning. Watts.

2. To obstruct or injure by prejudices previously raised.

Companies of learned men, be they never so great and revered, are to yield unto reason; the weight whereof is no whit prejudiced by the simplicity of his person, which doth allege it. Hooker.

Neither must his example, done without the book, prejudice that which is well appointed in the book. Whitgift.

I am not to prejudice the cause of my fellow-poets, though I abandon my own defence. Dryden.

3. To injure; to hurt; to diminish; to impair; to be detrimental to. This sense, as in the noun, is often improperly extended to meanings that have no relation to the original sense; who can read with patience of an ingredient that prejudices a medicine?

The strength of that law is such, that no particular nation can lawfully prejudice the same by any their several laws and ordinances, more than a man by his private resolutions, the law of the whole commonwealth wherein he liveth. Hooker.

The Danube refused, and the empire sav'd,
Say, is the majesty of virtue retriev'd?
And would it prejudice thy softer vein?

To sing the princes, Louis and Eugene? Prior.

To this is added a vicious bitter, warmer in the composition of its ingredients than the watry infusion; and, as gentian and lemon-peel make a bitter of so grateful a flavour, the only cure required in this composition was to chuse such an addition as might not prejudice it. London Dispensatory.

PREJUDICIAL, adj. [prejudicial, French;
from prejudice.]

1. Obstructed by means of opposite prepossessions.

'Tis a sad irreverence, without due consideration to look upon the actions of princes with a prejudi- cial eye. Holyday.

2. Contrary; opposite.

What one syllable is there, in all this, prejudi- cial any way to that which we hold? Hooker.

3. Mischievous; hurtful; injurious; detrimental. This sense is improper. See PREJUDICE, noun and verb.

His going away the next morning with all his troops, was most prejudicial and most ruinous to the king's affairs. Clarendon.

One of the young ladies reads, while the others are at work; so that the learning of the family is not at all prejudicial to its manufactures. Addison's Guardian.

A state of great prosperity, as it exposes us to various temptations, so it is often prejudicial to us in that it swells the mind with undue thoughts.

PREJUDICIALNESS, n. f. [from prejudi- cial.] The state of being prejudicial; mischievousness. Addison.

PRELACY, n. f. [from prelate.]

1. The dignity or post of a prelate or ec-clesiastick of the highest order.

Prelacies may be termed the greater benefices, as that of the pontificate, a patriarchship, an arch-bishoprick and bishoprick. Ayliffe.

2. Episcopacy; the order of bishops.

The presbyter, puff'd up with spiritual pride,
Shall on the necks of the low nobles ride,
His brethren damn, the civil power defy,
And parcel out republick prelacy. Dryden.

How many are there, that call themselves protestants, who put prelacy and popery together as terms convertible? Swift.

3. Bishops. Collectively.

Divers of the reverend prelacy, and other most judicious men, have especially bestowed their pains about the matter of jurisdiction. Hooker.

PRELATE, n. f. [prelat, Fr. prælatus, Lat.] An ecclesiastick of the highest order and dignity.

It becometh not the person of so grave a prelate, to be either utterly without council, as the rest were, or in a common perplexity to their humors alone secure. Hooker.

Hear him but reason in divinity,

And, all-admiring, with an inward wish

You would desire the king were made a prelate. Shakespeare.

The archbishop of Vienna, a reverend prelate, said one day to king Lewis XI. of France; So, your mortal enemy is dead, what time duke
Charles of Burgundy was slain. Bacon.

Yet Munster's prelate ever be accurst,
In whom we seek the German truth in vain. Dryden.

PRELATICAL, adj. [from prelate.] Relating to prelates or prelacy. Dryden.

PRELATION, n. f. [prælatus, Lat.] Preference; setting of one above the other.

In case the father left only daughters, they equally succeeded as in co-partnership, without any prelation or preference of the eldest daughter to a double portion. Hale.

PRELATURE, n. f. [prælatura, Lat.]

PRELATURESHIP, n. f. [prælature, French]

The state or dignity of a prelate. Dryden.

PRELECTION, n. f. [prælectio, Latin]

Reading; lecture; discourse.

He that is desirous to prosecute these prelections of infinitude, let him resort to the prelections of Father.
Hale.

PRELIBATION, n. f. [from prælibo, Lat.]

Taste beforehand; effusion previous to tasting.

The firm belief of this, in an innocent soul, is a high prelibation of those eternal joys. Mort.

PRELIMINARY, adj. [preliminaire, Fr. pre- limine, Latin.] Previous; introductory;
proemial.

My master needed not the assistance of that preliminary poet to prove his claim; his own lawful men discover him to be the king. Dryden.

PRELIMINARY, n. f. Something previous;
preparatory act; preparation; preparative.

The third consists of the ceremonies of the oath on both sides, and the preliminaries to the combat.
Notes on Hud.

PRELUDE, n. f. [prelude, Fr. preludium,
Lat.]

1. Some short flight of musick played before a full concert.

My weak essay
Begs a prelude, and points out their precedence. Young.

2. Something introductory; something that only shows what is to follow.

To his infant arms oppose
His father's rebels and his brother's foes;
Those were the prelude of his fate,
That form'd his manhood, to subdue
The hydra of the many-headed hissing crew.

The last Georgick was a good prelude to the Æneis, and very well shewed what the poet could do in the description of what was really great.

One concession to a man is but a prelude to another.

PRELU'DE. v. a. [preluder, Fr. præludo, Lat.] To serve as an introduction; to be previous to.

Either fouglier holding out their throats,
And folding up their wings, renew'd their notes,
As if all day, preluding to the fight,
They only had rehears'd, to sing by night.

PRELU'DIOUS. adj. [from prelude.] Previous;
introductory.

That's but a preludious bliss,
Two souls pickering in a kiss.

PRELU'DIUM. n. f. [Latin.] Prelude.

This Mæneius knows, expos'd to share
With me the rough preludium of the war.

PRELU'SIVE. adj. [from prelude.] Previous;
introductory; proemial.

Softly shaking on the dimpled pool
Precipice drops, let all their moisture flow.

PREMATURE. adj. [premature, French;
præmaturus, Lat.] Ripe too soon; formed before the time; too early; too soon said, believed, or done; too hasty.

'Tis hard to imagine, what possible consideration should persuade him to repent, till he deposited that premature persuasion of his being in Christ.

PREMATURELY. adv. [from premature.] Too early; too soon; with too hasty ripeness.

PREMATURENESS. } n. f. [from prema- PREMATUREITY. } ture.] Too great haste; unreasonable earliness.

TO PREMEDITATE. v. a. [præmeditor, Lat. præmeditor, Fr.] To contrive or form beforehand; to conceive beforehand.

Where I have come, great clerks have purposed
To greet me with premeditated welcomes.

TO PREMEDIATE. v. n. To have formed in the mind by previous meditation; to think beforehand.

Of themselves they were rude, and knew not so much as how to premeditate, the spirit gave them speech and eloquent utterance.

PREMEDIATION. n. f. [præmeditation, Lat.
præmeditation, Fr. from premeditate.]
Act of meditating beforehand.

Are all th' unlook'd-for issue of their bodies
To take their rooms ere I can place myself?

Hope is a pleasant premeditation of enjoyment, as when a dog expects, till his master has done something of the kind.

He amidst the disadvantages of extempore against premeditation, dispelled with ease and perfect calmness all the sophisms that had been brought against him.

Veris is not the effect of sudden thought; but this indicates, that sudden thought may be represented in veris, since those thoughts must be higher than there can raise without premeditation.

PREMERIT. v. a. [præmeritor, Lat.]
To deserve before.

They did not forgive Sir John Hotham, who had so much premerited of them.

PREMICES. n. f. [primitie, Lat. præmices, Fr.] First fruits.

A charger, yearly filled with fruits, was offered to the gods at their festivals, as the premier or first gathering.

PREMIER. adj. [French.] First; chief.

The Spaniard challengeth the premier place, in regard of his dominions.

Thus families, like realms, with equal fate,
Are sunk by premier ministers of state.

TO PREMISE. v. a. [præmissus, Latin.]
1. To explain previously; to lay down premises.

The apostle's discourse here is an answer upon a ground taken; he premiseth, and then infers.

I premise these particulars, that the reader may know I enter upon it as a very ungrateful task.

2. To send before the time. Not in use.

O let the vile world end,
And the premis'd flames of the last day
Knot earth and heav'n together!

PREMISES. n. f. [præmissa, Lat. præmisses,
French.]

1. Propositions antecedently supposed or proved.

They infer upon the premises, that as great difference as commodiously may be, there should be in all outward ceremonies between the people of God, and them which are not his people.

This is a regular an inference, that whilst the premises stand firm, it is impossible to shake the conclusion.

She study'd well the point, and found
Her forc conclusions were not sound,

From premises erroneous brought,
And therefore the deduction's nought.

2. In law language, houses or lands: as, I was upon the premises.

PREMISS. n. f. [præmissum, Lat.] Antecedent proposition. This word is rare in the singular.

They know the major or minor, which is implied, when you pronounce the other premiss and the conclusion.

PREMIUM. n. f. [præmium, Lat.] Something given to invite a loan or a bargain.

No body cares to make loans upon a new project;
whereas men never fail to bring in their money upon a land-tax, when the premium or interest allowed them is suited to the hazard they run.

People were tempted to lend, by great premiums and large interest; and it concerned them to preserve that government, which they had trusted with their money.

TO PREMIONISH. v. a. [præmonico, Lat.]
To warn or admonish beforehand.

PREMONISHMENT. n. f. [from premonish.]
Previous information.

After these premonishments, I will come to the comparison itself.

PREMONITION. n. f. [from premonish.]
Previous notice; previous intelligence.

What friendly premonitions have been spent
On your forbearance, and their vain event.

How great the force of such an erroneous persuasion is, we may collect from our Saviour's premonition to his disciples, when he tells them, that those who killed them should think they did God service.

PREMONITORY. adj. [from pre and monico,
Lat.] Previously advising.

TO PREMUNSTRATE. v. a. [præ and monstro, Lat.] To show beforehand.

PREMUNIRE. n. f. [Latin.]

1. A writ in the common law, whereby a penalty is incurable, as infringing some statute.

Premunire is now grown a good word in our English laws, by tract of time; and yet at first it was merely mistaken for premonice.

2. A penalty so incurred.

Woolsey incurred a premunire, forfeited his behaviour, estate, and life, which he ended in great calamity.

3. A difficulty; a distress. A low ungrammatical word.

PREMUNITION. n. f. [from præmunio,
Lat.] An anticipation of objection.

TO PREMUNIMATE. v. a. [præ and munio, Latin.] To forename.

He you would found,
Having ever seen, in the premunimate crimes,

The youth, you breathe of, guilty.

PREMUNITION. n. f. [præ and munio, Latin.] The privilege of being named first.

The watry productions should have the premo-mination; and they of the land rather derive their names, than nominate those of the sea.

PRENOTION. n. f. [prenotion, Fr. præ and nosco, Lat.] Foreknowledge; prescience.

The hedgehog's pretension of winds is so exact, that it stoppeth the north or southern hole of its nest, according unto prenotation of those winds ensuing.

PRENTICE. n. f. [contracted by colloquial licence, from apprentice.] One bound to a master, in order to instruction in a trade.

My accuser is my prentice, and when I did correct him for his fault, he did vow upon his knees
he would be even with me.

PRENTICESHIP. n. f. [from prentice.]
The servitude of an apprentice.

He serv'd a *prentice*ship, who sets up shop,
Ward try'd on puppies, and the poor his drop.

PRENUNCIATION. n. f. [prænuncio, Lat.]
The act of telling before.

PREOCCUPANCY. n. f. [from preoccupate.]
The act of taking possession before another.

TO PREOCCUPATE. v. a. [preoccupar,
Fr. præoccupo, Lat.]

1. To anticipate.

Honour aspires to death, grief flies to it; and fear preoccupieth it.

2. To prepossess; to fill with prejudices.

That the model be plain without colours, lest the eye preoccupate the judgment.

PREOCCUPATION. n. f. [preoccupation, Fr.
from preoccupate.]

1. Anticipation.

2. Prepossession.

3. Anticipation of objection.

As if, by way of preoccupation, he should have said; well, here you see your commission, this is your duty, these are your discouragements; never seek for evasions from worldly afflictions; this is your reward, if you perform it; this is your doom, if you decline it.

TO PREOCCUPY. v. a. To prepossess; to occupy by anticipation or prejudices.

I think it more respectful to the reader to leave something to reflections, than preoccupy his judgment.

TO PREMUNATE. v. a. [præ and munio, Lat.] To prognosticate; to gather from omens any future event.

Because many ravens were seen when Alexander entered Babylon, they were thought to premunate his death.

PREOPINION. n. f. [pre and opinio, Lat.] Opinion antecedently formed; prepossession.

Diet holds no solid rule of selection; some, in indistinct voracity, eating almost any; others, out of a timorous preopinion, restraining from very many things.

TO PREORDAIN. v. a. [pre and ordain.]
To ordain beforehand.

Sin is the contrary to the will of God, and if all things be preordained by God, and to demonstrated to be willed by him, it remains there is no such thing as sin.

Few souls preordain'd by fate,
The race of gods have reach'd this envied state.

PREORDINANCE. n. f. [pre and ordinance.] Antecedent decree; first decree. Not in use.

These lowly courtiers
Might stir the blood of ordinary men,
And turn preordination and first decree
Into the law of children.

PREORDINATION. n. f. [from preordain.]

The act of preordinating.

PREPARATION. n. f. [preparatio, Latin; preparation, Fr. from prepare.]

1. The act of preparing or previously fitting any thing to any purpose.

Nothing hath proved more fatal to that due preparation for another life, than our unhappy mistake of the nature and end of this.

2. Previous measures.

I will shew what preparations there were in nature for this dissolution, and after what manner it came to pass.

3. Ceremonious introduction.

I make bold to prefix, with little preparation, upon you.

—You're welcome.

4. The act of making or fitting by a regular process.

In the preparations of cookery, the most volatile parts of vegetables are destroyed.

5. Any thing made by process of operation.

I wish the chymists had been more sparing, who magnify their preparations, inveigle the curiosity of many, and delude the security of most.

6. Accomplishment; qualification. Out of use.

Sir John, you are a gentleman of excellent breeding, authentick in your place and person, generally allowed for your many warlike, courtlike, and learned preparations.

PREPARATIVE. adj. [preparatif, French; from prepare.] Having the power of preparing, qualifying, or fitting.

Would men have spent tollsome days and watchful nights in the laborious quest of knowledge preparative to this work?

PREPARATIVE. n. f. [preparatif, Fr. from prepare.]

1. That which has the power of preparing or previously fitting.

They tell us the profit of reading is singular, in that it serveth for a preparative unto sermons.

My book of advancement of learning may be some preparative or key for the better opening of the instruction.

Resolvedness in sin can, with no reason, be imagined a preparative to remission.

Though he judged the time of sickness an improper season for the great work of repentance; yet he esteemed it a most useful preparative, the voice of God himself exhorting to it.

Such a temper is a contradiction to repentance, as being founded in the destruction of those qualities, which are the only dispositions and preparatives to it.

2. That which is done in order to something else.

The miseries, which have ensued, may be yet, through thy mercy, preparatives to us of future blessings.

What avails it to make all the necessary preparatives for our voyage, if we do not actually begin the journey?

PREPARATIVELY. adv. [from preparative.] Previously; by way of preparation.

It is preparatively necessary to many useful things in this life, as to make a man a good physician.

PREPARATORY. adj. [preparatoire, Fr.]

1. Antecedently necessary.

The practice of all these is proper to our condition in this world, and preparatory to our happiness in the next.

2. Introductory; previous; antecedent. Preparatory, limited and formal interrogatories in writing preclude this way of occasional interrogatories.

Rains were but preparatory, the violence of the deluge depended upon the disruption of the great abyss.

TO PREPARE. v. a. [præparo, Latin; preparer, French.]

1. To fit for any thing; to adjust to any use; to make ready for any purpose.

Patient Octavia, plough thy visage up

With her prepared nails.

Prepare men's hearts by giving them the grace of humility, repentance, and probity of heart.

Confound the peace establish'd, and prepare

Their souls to hatred, and their hands to war.

Our souls, not yet prepar'd for upper light,

Till doomsday wander in the shades of night.

The beams of light had been in vain display'd,

Had not the eye been fit for vision made;

In vain the author had the eye prepar'd

With so much skill, had not the light appear'd.

2. To qualify for any purpose.

Some preachers, being prepared only upon two or three points of doctrine, run the same round.

3. To make ready beforehand.

There he maketh the hungry to dwell, that they may prepare a city for habitation.

Now prepare thee for another fight.

He took the golden compasses, prepar'd

In God's eternal store, to circumscribe

This universe.

4. To form; to make.

He hath founded it upon the seas, and prepared

it upon the floods.

5. To make by regular process: as, he prepared a medicine.

TO PREPARE. v. n.

1. To take previous measures.

Efficacy is a power of speech, which represents to our minds the lively ideas of things to truly, as if we saw them with our eyes; as Dido preparing to kill herself.

2. To make every thing ready; to put things in order.

Go in, sirrah, bid them prepare for dinner.

The long suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing.

3. To make one's self ready; to put himself in a state of expectation.

PREPARE. n. f. [from the verb.] Preparation; previous measures. Not in use.

In our behalf

Golevy men, and make prepare for war.

PREPAREDLY. adv. [from prepare.] By proper precedent measures.

She preparedly may frame herself

To th' way she's forc'd to.

PREPAREDNESS. n. f. [from prepare.]

State or act of being prepared: as, he is in a preparedness for his final exit.

PREPARER. n. f. [from prepare.]

1. One that prepares; one that previously fits.

The bishop of Ely, the first preparer of her mind to receive such a doleful accident, came to visit her.

2. That which fits for any thing.

Codded grains are an improver of land, and preparer of it for other crops.

PREPENSE. adj. [prepensus, Latin.]

PREPENSED. s. Forethought; preconceived; contrived beforehand; as, malice prepense.

TO PREPONDERATE. v. a. [from preponderate.]

To outweigh. Not used.

Though pillars by channelling be seemingly ingrooved to our sight, yet they are truly weakened, and therefore ought not to be the more slender, but the more corpulent, unless appearance preponderate truths.

PREPONDERANCE. n. f. [from preponderance.]

PREPONDERANCY. n. f. [rate.] The state of outweighing; superiority of weight.

As to addition of ponderosity in dead bodies, comparing them unto blocks, this occasional prepon-dancy is rather an appearance than reality.

The mind should examine all the grounds of probability, and, upon a due balancing the whole, reject or receive proportionably to the prepon-dancy of the greater grounds of probability.

Little light boats were the ships which people used, to the sides whereof this fish remora fastening, might make it swag, as the least preponderance on either side will do, and so retard its course.

TO PREPONDERATE. v. a. [præpon- dero, Latin.]

1. To outweigh; to overpower by weight.

An inconsiderable weight, by distance from the centre of the balance, will preponderate greater magnitudes.

The triviallest thing, when a passion is cast into the scale with it, preponderates substantial blessings

Government of the Tongue.

2. To overpower by stronger influence.

TO PREPONDERATE. v. n.

1. To exceed in weight.

That is no just balance, wherein the heavier side will not preponderate.

He that would make the lighter scale preponderate, will not so soon do it, by adding new weight to the emptier, as if he took out of the heavier, what he adds to the lighter.

Unless the very mathematical center of gravity of every system be fixed in the very mathematical center of the attractive power of all the rest, they cannot be evenly attracted on all sides, but must preponderate some way or other.

2. To exceed in influence or power analogous to weight.

In matters of probability, we cannot be sure that we have all particulars before us, and that there is no evidence behind, which may outweigh all that at present seems to preponderate with us.

By putting every argument on one side and the other into the balance, we must form a judgment which side preponderates.

PREPONDERATION. n. f. [from preponderate.]

The act or state of outweighing

any thing.

In matters, which require present practice, we must content ourselves with a mere preponderation of probable reasons.

TO PREPOSE. v. a. [proposer, Fr. from proponere, Lat.] To put before.

PREPOSITION. n. f. [proposition, French;

propositio, Latin.] In grammar, a particle governing a case.

A preposition signifies some relation, which the thing signified by the word following it, has to something going before in the discourse; as, Caesar came to Rome.

PREPOSITOR. n. f. [propositor, Latin]

A scholar appointed by the master to overlook the rest.

TO PREPOSSESS. v. a. [pre and posse.]

To fill with an opinion unexamined; to prejudice.

She was prepossessed with the scandal of falling

Wotton.

PREPOSSESSION. n. f. [from prepossess.]

1. Preoccupation; first possession.

God hath taken care to anticipate and prevent every man to give piety the prepossession, before other competitors should be able to prevent him; and to to engage him in holiness first, as Hammond.

2. Prejudice; preconceived opinion.

Had the poor vulgar rout only, who were held under the prejudices and prepossessions of education, been abused into such idolatrous superstitions, it might have been pitied, but not so much wondered at. South.

With thought, from prepossession free, reflect
On solar rays, as they the light respect. Blackmore.

PREPOSTEROUS. adj. [præposterous, Latin.]

1. Having that first which ought to be last. The method I take may be censured as preposterous, because I thus treat last of the antediluvian earth, which was first in order of nature. Woodw.

2. Wrong; absurd; perverted.

Put a case of a land of Amazons, where the whole government, publick and private, is in the hands of women: is not such a preposterous government against the first order of nature, for women to rule over men, and in itself void? Bacon.

Death from a father's hand, from whom I first receiv'd a being! 'tis a preposterous gift, An act at which inverted nature starts, And blushes to behold herself so cruel. Denham.

Such is the world's preposterous fate;— Amongst all creatures, mortal hate Lov'd, though immortal, doth create. Denham.

The Roman missionaries gave their liberal contributions, affording their preposterous charity to make them proselytes, who had no mind to be confessors or martyrs. Fell.

By this distribution of matter, continual provision is every where made for the supply of bodies, quite contrary to the preposterous reasonings of those men, who expected to different a result. Woodward.

3. Applied to persons: foolish; absurd.

Preposterous art! that never need to far
To know the cause why music was ordain'd. Shak.

PREPOSTEROUSLY. adv. [from preposterous.] In a wrong situation; absurdly.

Those things do best please me,
That best prepost'rously. Shakspeare.

Upon this supposition, one animal would have its lungs where another hath its liver, and all the other members preposterously placed; there could not be a like configuration of parts in any two individuals. Bentley.

PREPOSTEROUNESS. n. f. [from preposterous.] Absurdity; wrong order or method.

PREPOTENCY. n. f. [præpotentia, Latin.] Superior power; predominance.

If there were a determinate prepotency in the right, and such as ariseth from a constant root in nature, we might expect the same in other animals. Brown.

PREPUCE. n. f. [prepuce, Fr. praputium, Lat.] That which covers the glans; foreskin.

The prepuce was much inflamed and swelled. Wifeman.

TO PRE-REQUIRE. v. a. [pre and require.] To demand previously.

Some primary literal signification is prerequisite to that other of figurative. Hammond.

PRE-REQUISITE. adj. [pre and requisite.] Previously necessary.

The conformation of parts is necessary, not only unto the prerequisite and previous conditions of birth, but also unto the parturition. Brown.

Before the existence of compounded body, there must be a pre-existence of active principles, necessarily prerequisite to the mixing these particles of bodies. Hale.

PREROGATIVE. n. f. [prerogativ, Fr. prærogativa, low Lat.] An exclusive or peculiar privilege.

My daughters and the fair Parthenia might far better put in their claim for that prerogative. Sidney.

Our prerogative
Calls not your counsels, but our natural goodness imports this. Shakspeare.

How could communities,
The primogeniture, and day of birth,
VOL. II.

Prerogative of age, sceptres, and crowns. But by degree, stand in authentick place? Shakspeare. The great caliph hath an old prerogative in the choice and confirmation of the kings of Abyssia. Knowles.

They are the best laws, by which the king hath the justest prerogative, and the people the best liberty. Bacon.

Had any of these second causes despoiled God of his prerogative, or had God himself constrained the mind and will of man to iniquitous acts by any celestial enforcements? Raleigh.

They obtained another royal prerogative and power, to make war and peace at their pleasure. Davies.

The house of commons to these their prerogatives over the lords, sent an order to the lieutenant of the Tower, that he should cause him to be executed that very day. Clarendon.

For freedom full maintain'd alive,
Freedom an English subject's sole prerogative, Accept our pious prayer. Dryden.

All with the dire prerogative to kill,
Ev'n they wou'd have the pow'r, who want the will. Dryden.

It seems to be the prerogative of human understanding, when it has distinguished any ideas, to as to perceive them to be distinct, to consider in what circumstances they are capable to be compared. Locke.

I will not consider only the prerogatives of man above other animals, but the endowments which nature hath confered on his body in common with them. Ray.

PREROGATIVED. adj. [from prerogative.]

Having an exclusive privilege; having prerogative.

'Tis the plague of great ones,
Prerogativ'd are they less than the base;
'Tis destiny unhumable. Shakspeare.

PRES. Pres, prest, seem to be derived from the Saxon, preost, a priest; it being usual in after times to drop the letter o in like cases. Giffon.

PRESAGE. n. f. [presage, Fr. præsagium, Latin.] Prognostick; presension of futurity.

Joy and shout presage of victory. Milton.
Dreams have generally been considered by authors only as revelations of what has already happened, or as presages of what is to happen. Addison.

TO PRESAGE. v. a. [presager, Fr. præsagio, Latin.]

1. To forebode; to foreknow; to foretell; to prophesy: it seems properly used of internal presension.

Henry's late presaging prophecy
Did glad my heart with hope. Shakspeare.

What pow'r of mind
Foreseeing, or presaging from the depth
Of knowledge past or present, could have fear'd
How such united force of gods, how such As stood like these, could ever know repalle? Milton.

This contagion might have been presaged upon consideration of its precursors. Harvey.

With'd freedom I presage you soon will find,
If heav'n be just, and if to virtue kind. Dryden.

2. Sometimes with of before the thing foretold.

That by certain signs we may presage
Of heats and rains, and wind's impetuous rage.
The sovereign of the heav'n's has set on high
The moon to mark the changes of the sky. Dryden.

3. To foretoken; to foreshow.

If I may trust the flattering rash of sleep,
My dreams presage some joyful news at hand. Shakspeare.

Dreams advise some great good presaging. Milt.
That cloud, that hangs upon thy brow, presages
A greater storm than all the Turkish power
Can throw upon us. Denham.

When others sell, this standing did presage
The crown shou'd triumph over pop'lar rage. Waller.

PRESAGEMENT. n. f. [from presage.]

1. Forebodeiment; presension. I have spent much enquiry, whether he had any ominous presagement before his end. Watson.

2. Foretoken.

The falling of salt is an authentick presagement of ill luck, from whence notwithstanding nothing can be naturally feared. Brown.

PRESBYTER. n. f. [presbyter, Latin; πρεσβύτερος.]

1. A priest.

Presbyters absent through infirmity from these churches, might be said to preach by those deputies who in their stead did but read homilies. Hooker. They cannot delegate the episcopal power, properly localized, to presbyters, without giving them episcopal consecration. Lefroy.

2. A presbyterian.

And presbyters have their jack puddings too. Butler.

PRESBYTERIAL. } adj. [πρεσβυτερικός.]
PRESBYTERIAN. } Unfitting of elders;

a term for a modern form of ecclesiastical government.

Chiefly was urged the abolition of episcopal, and the establishing of presbyterian government.

King Charles. Who should exclude him from an interest, and so unhappily a more unavoidable sway in presbyterial determinations? Holyday.

PRESBYTERIAN. n. f. [from presbyter.]

And with their eager joy make triumph flow. Dryden.

5. To come unreasonably or importunately.
Counsel she may; and I will give thy ear
The knowledge first of what is fit to hear:
What I transact with others or alone,
Beware to learn; not press too near the throne. Dryden.

6. To urge with vehemence and importunity.
He pressed upon them greatly; and they turned in. Genesis.
The less blood he drew, the more he took of treasure; and, as some construed it, he was the more sparing in the one, that he might be the more pressing in the other. Bacon.

7. To act upon or influence.
So thick the shining army stands,
And press for passage with extended hands. Dryd.
When arguments press equally in matters indifferent, the safest method is to give up ourselves to neither. Addison.

8. To press upon. To invade; to push against.
Patroclus presses upon Hector too boldly, and by obliging him to fight, discovers it was not the true Achilles. Pope.

PRESS. n. f. [pressoir, Fr. from the verb.]
1. The instrument by which any thing is crushed or squeezed; a wine press, a cider press.

The press is full, the fats overflow. Joel.
When one came to the press fats to draw out fifty vessels out of the press, there were but twenty. Hagui.

he proved frequently concerned. Fell.

While Mist and Wilkins rise in weekly night,
Make presser groan, lead senators to fight. Young.
3. Crowd; tumult; throng.

Paul and Barnabas, when infidels admiring their virtues, went about to sacrifice unto them, rent their garments in token of horror, and as frightened, ran crying through the press of the people, O men wherefore do ye these things? Hooker.

She held a great gold chain linked well,
Whose upper end to highest heaven was knit,
And lower part did reach to lowest hell,
And all that press did round about her swell,
To catchen hold of that long chain. Spenser.

Who is it in the press that calls on me?
I hear a tongue, shriller than all the music,
Cry, Caesar. Shakspeare.

Ambitious Turnus in the press appears,
And aggravating crimes augment their fears. Dry.

A new express all Agra does alight,
Darah and Aurengzebe are join'd in fight;
The press of people thickens to the court,
The impatient crowd devouring the report. Dryden.

Through the press entag'd Thalesia lies,
And scatters deaths around from both her eyes. Pope.

4. Violent tendency.

Death having prey'd upon the outward parts,
Leaves them insensible; his siege is now
Against the mind; the which he pricks and wounds
With many legions of strange fantasies;
Which in their throng, and press to that last hold,
Confound themselves. Shakspeare.

5. A kind of wooden case or frame for clothes and other uses.

Creep into the kill hole.—Neither press, coffer, chest, trunk; but he hath an abstract for the remembrance of such places. Shakspeare.

The one contracts his words, speaking pressingly and short; the other delights in long-breathed accents. Howel.

PRESSION. n. f. [from press.] The act of pressing.

If light consisted only in pression, propagated without actual motion, it would not be able to agitate and heat the bodies which reflect and reflect it: if it consisted in motion, propagated to all distances in an instant, it would require an infinite force every moment, in every shining particle, to generate that motion: and if it consisted in pression or motion, propagated either in an instant or in time, it would bend into the shadow. Newton.

PRESSITANT. adj. Gravitating; heavy.
Not in use.

Neither the celestial matter of the vortices, nor the air, nor water, are pressitant in their proper places. More.

1. The act of pressing or crushing.

2. The state of being pressed or crushed.

3. Force acting against any thing; gravitation; weight acting or resisting.

The inequality of the pressure of parts appeareth in this; that if you take a body of stone, and another of wood of the same magnitude and shape, and throw them with equal force, you cannot throw the wood so far as the stone. Bacon.

Although the glasses were a little convex, yet this transparent spot was of a considerable breadth, which breadth seemed principally to proceed from the yielding inwards of the parts of the glasses, by reason of their mutual pressure. Newton.

The blood flows through the vessels by the excess of the force of the heart above the incumbent pressure, which in fat people is excessive. Arbuthnot.

4. Violence inflicted; oppression.

A wife father ingenuously confessed, that those, which persuaded pressure of consciences, were commonly interested therein. Bacon.

His modesty might be secured from pressure by the concealing of him to be the author. Fell.

5. Affliction; grievance; distress.

Mine own and my people's pressures are grievous, and peace would be very pleasing. K. Charles.
The genuine price of lands in England would be twenty years purchase, were it not for accidental pressures under which it labours. Child.

To this consideration he retreats, in the midst of all his pressures, with comfort; in this thought, notwithstanding the sad afflictions with which he was overwhelmed, he mightily exults. Atterbury.

Excellent was the advice of Elephas to Job, in the midst of his great troubles and pressures: acquaint thyself now with God, and be at peace. Atterbury.

6. Impression; stamp; character made by impression.

From my memory
I'll wipe away all trivial fond records,
All laws of books, all forms, all pressures past,
That youth and observation copy'd there. Shakspeare.

PREST. adj. [prest or pret, Fr.]

1. Ready; not dilatory. This is said to have been the original sense of the word prest men; men, not forced into the service, as now we understand it, but men, for a certain sum received, prest or ready to march at command.

Each mind is prest, and open every ear,
To hear new tidings, though they no way joy us. Fairfax.

Gritius desired nothing more than to have confirmed the opinion of his authority in the minds of the vulgar people, by the prest and ready attendance of the Vayoud. Knotter.

2. Neat; tight. In both senses, the word is obsolete.

More wealth any where, to be breese,
More people, more handsome and prest
Where find ye? Tusser.

There's every piece as big as ten. Swift.

PRESUMABLY. adv. [from presume.] Without examination.

Authors presumably writing by common places, wherein, for many years, promiscuously amassing all that make for their subject, break forth at last into useless rhapsodies. Brown.

To PRESUME. v. n. [presumer, French; presumo, Latin.]

1. To suppose; to believe previously without examination.

O much deceiv'd, much falling, hapless Eve!
Of thy presum'd return! event perverse! Milton.

Experience supplants the use of conjecture in the point; we do not only presume it may be so, but actually find it is so. Gouven. of the Tongue.

2. To suppose; to affirm without immediate proof.

Although in the relation of Moses there be very few persons mentioned, yet are there many more to be presumed. Brown.

I presume,

That as my head has open'd bounty to you,
My heart dropp'd love, my power run'd honour-more. Shakspeare.

On you, than any.

3. To venture without positive leave.
There was a matter we were no less desirous to know, than fearful to ask, lest we might presume too far. Bacon.

I to the heav'nly vision thus presum'd. Milton.

4. To form confident or arrogant opinions;
with upon before the cause of confidence.

The life of Ovid being already written in our language, I will not pretence to say upon myself, to think I can add any thing to Mr. Sandys his undertaking.

This man presumes upon his parts, that they will not fail him at time of need, and so thinks it superfluous labour to make any provision beforehand.

5. To make confident or arrogant attempts. In this we fail to perform the thing, which God seeth meet, convenient, and good; in that we pretence to see what is meet and convenient, better than God himself.

God, to remove his ways from human sense, Plac'd heav'n from earth so far, that earthly sight, If it presumes, might err in things too high, And no advantage gain.

6. It has on or upon sometimes before the thing supposed.

He, that would not deceive himself, ought to build his hypothesis on matter of fact, and not pretence on matter of fact, because of his hypothesis.

Luther presumes upon the gift of continency.

7. It has of sometimes, but not properly. Presuming of his force, with sparkling eyes, Already he devours the promis'd prize.

PRESUMPTUOUSLY. n. f. [from presume.] One that presumptuous; an arrogant person.

Heavy with some high minds is an overweight of obligation; otherwise great delayers do grow intolerable presumpers.

PRESUMPTION. n. f. [presumptus, Latin; presumption, Fr.]

1. Supposition previously formed. Thou hast shew'd us how unsafe it is to offend thee, upon presumptuous assertions to please thee.

Though men in general believed a future state, yet they had but confused presumptions of the nature and condition of it.

2. Confidence grounded on any thing supposed: with upon.

A presumption upon this aid, was the principal motive for the undertaking.

Those at home held their immoderate engrossments of power by no other tenure, than their own presumption upon the necessity of affairs.

3. An argument strong, but not demonstrative; a strong probability.

The error and insufficiency of their arguments doth make it, on the contrary side against them, a strong presumption, that God hath not moved their hearts to think such things, as he hath not enabled them to prove.

4. Arrogance; confidence blind and adventurous; presumptuousness.

Let my presumption not provoke thy wrath; For I am forty, that with reverence

I did not entertain thee as thou art.

Let blind presumption work these ruinings.

I had the presumption to dedicate to you a very unfinish'd piece.

5. A reasonable confidence of divine favour. The awe of his majesty will keep us from presumption, and the promises of his mercy from despair.

PRESUMPTIVE. adj. [presumptivus, Fr. from presume.]

1. Taken by previous supposition. We commonly take shape and colour for so presumptive ideas of several species, that, in a good picture, we readily say this is a lion, and that a roe.

2. Supposed: as, the presumptive heir: opposed to the heir apparent.

3. Confident; arrogant; presumptuous. There being two opinions repugnant to each other, it may not be presumptive or sceptical to doubt of both.

PRESUMPTUOUS. adj. [presumptuosus, French.]

1. Arrogant; confident; insolent.

Presumptuous priest, this place commands my patience.

I follow him not With any token of presumptuous suit; Nor would I have him till I do deserve him.

Their minds somewhat rais'd By false presumptuous hope.

It being not the part of a presumptuous, but of a truly humble man to do what he is bidden, and to please those whom he is bound in duty to obey.

Some will not venture to look beyond received notions of the age, nor have so presumptuous a thought, as to be wiser than their neighbours.

2. Irreverent with respect to holy things. The firs whereunto he talketh, are not presumptuous; but are ordinarily of weakness and infirmity.

Thus I presumptuous; and the vision bright, As with a smile more brighten'd, thus reply'd.

The pow'r incens'd Punish'd his presumptuous pride, That for his daring enterprise the dy'd.

Canst thou love Presumptuous Cretes, that bould the tomb of Jove?

PRESUMPTUOUSLY. adv. [from presumptuous.]

1. Arrogantly; confidently.

2. Irreverently. Do you, who study nature's works, decide, Whilst I the dark mysterious cause admire; Nor into what the gods conceal, presumptuously enquire.

3. With vain and groundless confidence in divine favour.

I entreat your prayers, that God will keep me from all premature persuasion of my being in Christ, and not suffer me to go on presumptuously or desperately in any course.

PRESUMPTUOUSNESS. n. f. [from presumptuous.] Quality of being presumptuous; confidence; irreverence.

With flying speed and seeming great pretence Came running in a messenger.

So strong his appetite was to those executions he had been accustomed to in Ireland, without any kind of commission or pretence of authority.

Let not the Trojans, with a feign'd pretence Of proffer'd peace, delude the Latian prince.

I should have dressed the whole with greater care; but I had little time, which I am sure you know to be more than pretence.

3. Assumption; claim to notice. Despise not these few ensuing pages; for never was any thing of this pretence more ingeniously imparted.

4. Claim true or false. Spirits on our just pretences arm'd Fell with us.

O worthy not of liberty alone, Too mean pretence, but honour.

Primogeniture cannot have any pretence to a right of solely inheriting property or power.

5. Shakespeare uses this word with more affinity to the original Latin, for something threatened, or held out to terrify.

I have conceived a most faint neglect of late, which I have rather blamed as my own peculiar curiosity, than as a very pretence and purpose of unkindness.

In the great hand of God I stand, and thence Against the undivulg'd pretence I fight Of treacherous malice.

He hath writ this to feel my affection for your honour, and to no other pretence of danger.

TO PRETEND. v. a. [pretendo, Latin; pretendre, Fr.]

1. To hold out; to stretch forward. This is mere Latinity, and not used; perhaps it should be pretends.

Lucas, to lash his horses, lends Prone to the wheels, and his left foot pretends.

2. To simulate; to make false appearances or representations; to allege falsely.

Let him know, Left wilfully transgressing he pretend Surprised.

What reason then can any man pretend against religion, when it is so apparently for the benefit, not only of human society, but of every particular person?

3. To show hypocritically. 'Tis their interest to guard themselves from their riotous effects of pretended zeal, nor is it less their duty.

4. To hold out as a delusive appearance to exhibit as a cover of something hidden. This is rather Latin.

Warn all creatures from three Henceforth; lest that too heavily torn, pretend To hellish falsehood, snare them.

5. To claim. In this sense we rather say pretend to.

Chiefs shall be grudg'd the part which the pretend.

Are they not rich? what more can they pretend?

TO PRETEND. v. n.

1. To put in a claim truly or falsely. It seldom used without shade of censure.

What peace can be, where both to one pretend But they more diligent, and we more strong.

In those countries that pretend to freedom princes are subject to those laws which their people have chosen.

2. To presume on ability to do any thing to profess presumptuously.

Of the ground of redness in this sea are we so fully satisfied? for there is another red sea, whose name we pretend not to make out from their principles.

PRETENDER. n. f. [from pretend.] One who lays claim to any thing.

The prize was disputed only till you were seen; now all pretenders have withdrawn their claims.

Dryden.

Whatever victories the several pretenders to the empire obtained over one another, they are recalled on ours without the least reflection. Addij. The numerous pretenders to places would never have been kept in order, if expectation had been cut off.

Swift.

To put contempt ye vain pretenders fall, The people's fable and the scorn of all. Pope. Pretenders to philosophy or good sense grow fond of this sort of learning.

Watts.

PRETENDINGLY. adv. [from pretending.] Arrogantly; presumptuously.

PRETERITLY. adv. [from pretty.] Neatly;

elegantly; pleasingly without dignity or elevation.

How prettyly the young swain seems to wash

The hand was fair before. Shakespeare.

One faith prettyly; in the quenching of the flame of a pestilentague, nature is like people that come to quench the fire of a hoarse; so busy, as one letheth another. Bacon.

Children, kept out of ill company, take a pride to behave themselves prettyly, after the fashion of others. Locke.

PRETTINESS. n. f. [from pretty.] Beauty without dignity; neat elegance without elevation.

There is goodliness in the bodies of animals, as in the ox, greyhound and stag; or majesty and statefulness, as in the lion, horse, eagle and cock; grave

awfulness, as in insatiable; or elegance and prettiness,

as in lesser dogs and most sort of birds; all which are several modes of beauty. Morr.

These drops of prettiness, scatteringly sprinkled amongst the creatures, were designed to delectate and exalt our conceptions, not to inveigle or detain our passions.

Boswell.

PRETTY. adj. [præc, finery, Sax. pretto, Italian; prat, prattish, Dutch.]

1. Neat; elegant; pleasing without furprize or elevation.

The pretty gentleman is the most complaisant creature in the world, and is always in my mind.

Spectator.

3. It is used in a kind of diminutive contempt in poetry, and in conversation: as, a pretty fellow indeed!

A pretty talk; and so I told the fool,

Who needs must undertake to please by rule. Dryd.

He'll make a pretty figure in a triumph,

And serve to trip before the victor's chariot.

Addison

4. Not very small. A very vulgar use.

A knight of Wales, with slipping and some pretty company, did go to discover those parts.

Abbot.

Cut off the stalks of cucumbers, immediately after their bearing, close by the earth, and then cut a pretty quantity of earth upon the plant, and they will bear next year before the ordinary time. Bacon.

I would have a mount of some pretty height, leaving the wall of the enclosure breast high. Bacon.

Of this mixture we put a parcel into a crucible, and suffered it for a pretty while to continue red hot.

Boswell.

A weasle a pretty way off stood leering at him.

L'Estrange.

PRETTY. adv. In some degree. This word is used before adverbs or adjectives to intend their signification: it is less than very.

The world begun to be pretty well stocked with people, and human industry drained those inhabitable places.

Burnet.

I shall not enquire how far this lottish method may advance the reputation of learning; but I am pretty sure it is no great addition to theirs who use it.

This custom makes the short-sighted bigots, and the warmer secticks, as far as it prevails. Locke.

2. To overcome; to gain the superiority: with on or upon, sometimes over or against.

They that were your enemies, are his,

And have prevailed as much on him as you. Shaksp.

Nor is it hard for thee to preserve me amidst the unjust hatred and jealousies of too many, which thou hast suffered to prevail upon me. King Charles.

I told you then he should prevail, and speed

On his bad errand. Milton.

The millennium prevailed long against the truth

upon the strength of authority. Decay of Pity.

While Marbro's canon thus prevails by laud,

Britain's weakness by Anna's high command,

Reinforces the Lusitan billions side. Blount.

This song could prevail
O'er death and o'er hell,
A conquest how hard and how glorious;
Though fate had fast bound her
With Styx nine times round her,
Yet music and love were victorious. Pope.
This kingdom could never prevail against the united power of England. Swift.
3. To gain influence; to operate effectually.

I do not pretend that these arguments are demonstrations of which the nature of this thing is not capable: but they are such strong probabilities, as ought to prevail with all those who are not able to produce greater probabilities to the contrary. Wilkins.

4. To persuade or induce. It has with, upon, or on before the person persuaded. With minds obdurate nothing prevailed, as well they that preach, as they that read unto such, shall still have cause to complain with the prophets of old, who will give credit unto our teaching? Hooker.
He was prevailed with to restrain the earl of Bristol upon his first arrival. Clarendon.

The serpent with me
Persuively has so prevail'd, that I Have also tasted. Milton.

They are more in danger to go out of the way, who are marching under the conduct of a guide, than he that has not yet taken a step, and is likelier to be prevailed on to enquire after the right way. Locke.
There are four sorts of arguments that men, in their reasonings with others, make use of to prevail on them. Locke.

The gods pray
He would refuse the conduct of the day,
Nor let the world be lost in endless night;
Prevail'd upon at last, again he took
The harness'd deeds, which still with horror shook.

Upon assurances of revolt, the queen was prevail'd with to send her forces upon that expedition. Seyt.

Prevail upon some judicious friend to be your constant hearer, and allow him the utmost freedom. Swift.

PREVAILING. adj. [from prevail.] Pre-dominant; having most influence; having great power; prevalent; efficacious.
Probabilities, which cross men's appetites and prevailing passions, run the same rate: let never so much probability hang on one side of a covetous man's reasoning, and money on the other, it is easy to foresee which will outweigh. Locke.

Save the friendless infants from oppression;
Saints shall assist thee with prevailing prayers,
And warring angels combat on thy side. Rowe.

PREVAILEMENT. n. f. [from prevail.] Prevalence.

Of strong prevailment in unhardened youth. Shakespeare.

Nothing engendered death prevend his meat;
Flies have their tables spread, ere they appear;
Some creatures have in winter what to eat;
Others do sleep. Herbert.

3. To anticipate.
Soon thou shalt find, if thou but arm their hands,

Their ready guilt prevending thy commands;
Could'st thou some great proportion'd mischief frame,

They'd prove the father from whose loins they came. Pope.

4. To preoccupy; to preengage; to attempt first.

Thou hast prevended us with overtures of love, even when we were thine enemies. King Charles.

5. To hinder; to obviate; to obstruct.

This is now almost the only sense.
I do find it cowardly and vile,
For fear of what might fall, so to prevent
The time of life. Shakespeare.

This your inconstant care could not prevend,
Foretold so lately what would come to pass. Milton.

Too great confidence in success is the likeliest to prevend it; because it hinders us from making the best use of the advantages which we enjoy. Atter.
To PREVENT. v. n. To come before the time. A latinism.

Strawberries watered with water, wherein hath been steeped sheep's dung, will prevent and come early. Bacon.

His natural antipathy to a man who endeavours to signify his parts in the world, has hindered many persons from making their appearance in print.

Addison.

I published some tables, which were out of print.

Arbutnot.

The rights of the christian church are scornfully trampled on in print.

Atterbury.

7. Single sheet printed for sale; a paper something less than a pamphlet.

The prints, about three days after, were filled with the same terms.

Addison.

The publick had said before, that they were dull; and they were at great pains to purchase room in the prints, to testify under their hands the truth of it.

Pope.

Inform us, will the emperor treat,

Or do the prints and papers lie?

Pope.

8. Formal method. A low word.

Lay his head sometimes higher, sometimes lower,
That he may not feel every little change, who is not designed to have his maid lay all things in print, and tuck him in warm.

Locke.

PRINTER. n. f. [from print.]

1. One that prints books.

I find, at reading all over, to deliver to the printer, in that which I ought to have done to comply with my design, I am fallen very short.

Digby.

To buy books, only because they were published by an eminent printer, is much as if a man should buy cloaths that did not fit him, only because made by some famous tailor.

Pope.

See, the printer's boy below;
Ye hawkers all, your voices lift.

Swift.

2. One that stains linen with figures.

PRINTLESS. adj. [from print.] That leaves no impression.

Ye elves,

And ye, that on the sands with printless foot
Do chase the ebbing Neptune.

Shakespeare.

Whilst from off the waters fleet,
Thus I set my printless feet,

O'er the cowslip's velvet head,

That bends not as I tread.

Milton.

Form, fronting on the sun, thy showery prism.

Thomson.

PRISMATICK. adj. [prismatique, Fr. from prisme.] Formed as a prism.

If the mass of the earth was cubick, prismatick, or any other angular figure, it would follow, that one, too vast a part, would be drowned, and another be dry.

Dorham.

T'alle eloquence, like the prismatick glass,
Its gaudy colours spreads on every place;

The face of nature we no more survey,
All glares alike, without distinction gay.

Pope.

P R I

PRISMATICALLY. adv. [from prismatich.]

In the form of a prism.

Take notice of the pleasing variety of colours exhibited by the triangular glass, and demand what addition or decrement of either salt, sulphur, or mercury, befalls the glass, by being prismatically figured; and yet it is known, that without that shape, it would not afford those colours as it does.

Boyle.

PRIVATION. n. f. [privation, Fr. privatio, Latin.]

1. Removal or destruction of any thing or quality.

For, what is this contagious sin of kind, But a privation of that grace within? Devin.

If the privation be good, it follows not the former condition was evil, but less good; for the flower or blossom is a positive good, although the removal of it, to give place to the fruit, be a comparative good. Bacon.

So bounded are our natural desires, That wanting all, and letting pain aside, With bare privation sense is satiated. Dryden.

After some account of good, evil will be known by consequence, as being only a privation or absence of good. South.

A privation is the absence of what does naturally belong to the thing, or which ought to be present with it; as when a man or horse is deaf or dead, or a physician or divine unlearned; these are privations. Watts.

2. The act of the mind by which, in considering a subject, we separate it from any thing appendant.

3. The act of degrading from rank or office.

If part of the people or estate be somewhat in the election, you cannot make them nulls or cyphers in the privation or translation. Bacon.

PRIVATIVE. adj. [privativus, Fr. privativus, Latin.]

1. Causing privation of any thing.

2. Confisting in the absence of something; not positive. Privative is in things what negative is in propositions.

The impression from privative to active, as from silence to noise, is a greater degree than from less noise to more. Bacon.

The very privative blessings, the blessings of immunity, safeguard, liberty and integrity, which we enjoy, deserve the thanksgiving of a whole life. Taylor.

PRIVATIVE. n. f. That of which the essence is the absence of something; silence is only the absence of sound.

PRIV

Harmonical sounds and discordant sounds are both active and positive, but blackness and darkness are indeed but privations, and therefore have little or no activity; somewhat they do contristate, but very little. Bacon

PRIVATIVELY, adv. [from privative.]

1. By the absence of something necessary to be present.

2. Negatively.

The duty of the new covenant is set down, full privatively, not like that of Mosaic observances external, but positively, laws given into the minds and hearts. Hammond

PRIVATIVENESS, n. f. [from privative.]

PRIVILEGE, n. f. [privilegium, Fr. from privilegium, Latin.]

1. Peculiar advantage.

Here's my sword,
Behold it is the privilege of mine honours,
My oath, and my profession. Shakespeare

Invisible, yet stay'd, such privilege

Hath omnipotence. Milton

He claims his privilege, and says 'tis fit,

Nothing should be the judge of wit, but wit. Denham

Smiles, not allow'd to beat, from reason move,

And are the privilege of human love. Dryden

When the chief captain ordered him to be scourged uncondemned, he pleads the legal privilege of a Roman, who ought not to be treated to Ketticell

A soul that can securely death defy,

And count it nature's privilege to die. Dryden

The privilege of birth-right was a double portion. Locke

2. Immunity; right not universal.

I beg the ancient privilege of Athens. Shaksp.

TO PRIVILEGE, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To invest with rights or immunities;

to grant a privilege.

The great are privileg'd alone,

To punish all injustice but their own. Dryden

He happier yet, who privileg'd by fate

To shorter labour, and a lighter weight,

Receiv'd but yesterday the gift of breath,

Onduin'd to-morrow to return to death. Prior

2. To exempt from censure or danger.

The court is rather deem'd as a privileg'd place of unbridled licentiousness, than as the abiding of him, who, as a father, should give a fatherly example. Sidney

He took this place for sanctuary,

And it shall privilege him from your hands. Shakespeare

This place

Both privilege me, speak what reason will. Daniel

3. To exempt from paying tax or imposts.

Many things are by our laws privileg'd from taxes, which by the canon law are chargeable. Hale

PRIVELY, adv. [from privy.] Secretly; privately.

They have the profits of their lands by pretence of conveyances thrust into their privy friends, who privily send them the revenues. Spenser

PRIVITY, n. f. [privity, Fr. from privy.]

1. Private communication.

I will unto you in privity discover the drift of my purpose; I mean thereby to settle an eternal peace in that country, and also to make it very profitable to her majesty. Spenser

2. Confidentialness; joint knowledge; private concourse.

The authority of higher powers hath force even in these things which are done without their privy, and are of mean reckoning. Hooker

Upon this French going out, took he upon him,

Without the privy of the king, to appoint

Who should attend him. Shakespeare

All the doors were laid open for his departure, not without the privy of the prince of Orange, concluding that the Kingdom might better be settled in his absence. Swift

PRIV

3. [In the plural.] Secret parts.

Few of them have any thing to cover their privies. Abbott

PRIVY, adj. [privus, Fr.]

1. Private; not public; assigned to secret uses.

The party, 'gainst the which he doth contrive,

Shall seize on half his goods; the other half

Comes to the privy coffers of the state. Shakespeare

2. Secret; clandestine; done by stealth.

He took advantage of the night for such privy attempts, inasmuch that the bust of his manliness was spread every where. Maccabees

3. Secret; not shown; not public.

The sword of the great men that are slain entereth into their privy chamber. Ezekiel

4. Admitted to secrets of state.

The king has made him

One of the privy council. Shakespeare

'One, having let his beard grow from the martyrdom of king Charles I till the restoration, defined to be made a privy councillor. Spectator

5. Confidential to any thing, admitted to participation of knowledge.

Sir Valentine

This night intends to steal away your daughter,

Myself am one made privy to the plot. Shakespeare

Many being privy to the fact,

How hard is it to keep it unbetray'd? Donch.

He would rather lose half of his kingdom, than be privy to such a secret, which he commanded me never to mention. Swift

PRIVY, n. f. Place of retirement; needfuly house.

Your fancy

Would fill the same ideas give ye,

As when you spy'd her on the privy. Swift

PRIZE, n. f. [prix, Fr.]

1. A reward gained by contest with competitors.

If ever he go alone, I'll never wrestle for prize.

Shakespeare

Though their foe were big and strong, and often brake the ring,

For'd of their lances; yet enforce't, he left th'

affected prize. Chapman

I fought and conquer'd, yet have lost the prize.

Dryden

The raising such silly competitions among the ignorant, proposing prizes for such useless accomplishments, and inspiring them with such absurd ideas of superiority, has in it something immoral

as well as ridiculous. Addison

They are not indeed suffered to dispute with us

the proud prizes of arts and sciences, of learning and elegance, in which I have much suspicion they would often prove our superiors. Law

2. A reward gained by any performance.

True poets empty fame and praise despise;

Fame is the trumpet, but your smile the prize. Dryden

3. [prise, French.] Something taken by adventure; plunder.

The king of Scots did send to France,

To fill king Edward's fame with prisoner kings,

And make his chronicle as rich with prize,
As is the oxy bottom of the sea. Shakespeare

With sunken wreck.

Age that all men overcomes, has made his prize

on thee. Chapman

He acquitted himself like a valiant, but not like an honest man; for he converted the prizes to his own use. Arbuthnot

Then prostrate falls, and begs with ardent eyes

Soon to obtain and long possess the prize. Pope

TO PRIZE, v. a. [from appraiser; priser,
Fr. apprécier, Lat.]

1. To rate; to value at a certain price.

Life I prize not a straw; but for mine honour

Which I would free. Shakespeare

A goodly prize that I was prized at of them. Zachariah

2. To esteem; to value highly.

PRO

I go to free us both of pain;
I priz'd your person, but your crown I did not.

Dryden

Some the French writers, some our own delight;

The ancients only, or the moderns prize. Pope

PRIZER, n. f. [priseur, Fr. from prize.]

He that values.

It holds its estimate and dignity,

As well wherein 'tis precious of itself,

As in the prizer. Shakespeare

PRIZEFIGHTER, n. f. [prize and fighter.]

One that fights publicly for a reward.

Martin and Craabe engaged like prizefighters.

Arbuthnot and Pope

In Fig the prizefighter by day delight. Bramston

PRO, [Latin.] For; in defence of: pro and con, for pro and contra, for and against. Despicable cant.

Doctrinal points in controversy had been agitated in the pulpits, with more warmth than had used to be; and thence the animosity merited in books

pro and con. Clarendon

Mathew met Richard, when

Of many knotty points they spoke,

And pro and con by turns they took. Prior

PROBABILITY, n. f. [probabilitas, Lat.

probabilité, Fr. from probable.] Likelihood; appearance of truth; evidence arising from the preponderation of argument: it is less than moral certainty.

Probability is the appearance of the agreement or disagreement of two ideas, by the intervention of proofs, whose connection is not constant; but appears for the most part to be so. Locke

As for probabilities, what thing was there ever set down to agreeable with sound reason, but some probable they against it might be made? Hooker

The reason why men are moved to believe a probability of gain by adventuring their stocks into such foreign countries as they have never seen, and of which they have made no trial, is from the testimony of other credible persons. Willins

It is a truth be certain, and thwart interest, it will quickly fetch it down to but a probability, nay, if it does not carry with it an impenetrable evidence, it will go near to debase it to a downright fallacy.

South

Though moral certainty be sometimes taken for a high degree of probability, which can only produce a doubtful assent; yet it is also frequently used for a firm assent to a thing upon such grounds

as fully intify a prudent man. Tillotson

For a perpetual motion, magneal virtues are not without some strong probabilities of proving effectual. Willins

Which tempers, if they were duly improved by proper studies, and sober methods of education, would in all probability carry them to greater heights of prize, than are to be found amongst the generality of men. Law

PROBABLE, adj. [probable, Fr. probabilis, Latin.] Likely; having more evidence than the contrary.

The publick approbation, given by the body of this whole church unto those things which are established, doth make it but probable that they are good, and therefore unto a necessary proof that they are not good it must give place. Hooker

The only reasonable inquiry is, which is of pro- babilities the most, or of impossibilities the least such.

Hammond

I do not say, that the principles of religion are morally probable; I have before said that to be morally certain; and that to a man who is careful to preserve his mind free from prejudice, and to consider, they will appear unquestionable, and the deductions from them demonstrable. Willins

That is accounted probable, which has better arguments producible for it, than can be brought against it. South

They assented to things, that were neither evident nor certain, but only probable; for they con-sider'd, they were handyzed upon a probable persuasion of the honesty and truth of those whom they corresponded with. South

PROBABLY, adv. [from probable.] Likely; in likelihood.

PRO

Distinction betwixt what may possibly, and what will probably be done. L'Estrange.

Our constitution in church or state could not probably have been long preserved, without such methods. Swift

PROBAT. n. f. [Latin.] The proof of wills and testaments of persons deceased in the spiritual court, either in common form by the oath of the executor, or with witnesses. Dict.

PROBATION. n. f. [probatio, from probo, Lat. probation, Fr.]

1. Proof; evidence; testimony.

Of the truth herein,
This present object made probation. Shakspeare.
He was lap'd in a most curious mantle, which, for more probation, I can produce. Shakspeare.

The kinds of probation for several things being as much disproportioned, as the objects of the several senses are to one another. Wilkins.

2. The act of proving by ratiocination or testimony.

When these principles, what is, is, and it is impossible for the same thing to be, and not to be, are made use of in the probation of propositions, wherein are words standing for complex ideas, as man or horse, there they make men receive and retain falsehood for manifest truth. Locke.

3. Trial; examination.

In the practical part of knowledge, much will be left to experience and probation, whereunto indication cannot so fully reach. Bacon.

4. Moral trial.

At the end of the world, when the state of our trial and probation shall be finished, it will be proper season for the distribution of public justice. Nelson.

5. Trial before entrance into monastic life; noviciate.

I suffer many things as an author militant, whereof, in your days of probation, you have been a sharer. Pope.

PROBATIONARY. adj. [from probation.]

Serving for trial.

PROBATIONER. n. f. [from probation.]

1. One who is upon trial.

Hear a mortal muse thy praise rehearse,
In no ignoble verse;
But such as thy own verse did practise here,
When thy first fruits of poetry were giv'n,
To make thyself a welcome inmate there;
While yet a young probationer,
And candidate of heav'n. Dryden.

Build a thousand churches, where these probationers may read their wall lectures. Swift.

2. A novice.

This root of bitterness was but a probationer in the soil; and though it set forth some offsets to preserve its kind, yet Satan was fain to cherish them. Decay of Piety.

PROBATIONERSHIP. n. f. [from probation.]

State of being a probationer; noviciate.

He has afforded us only the twilight of probability, suitable to that state of mediocrity and probationership, he has been pleas'd to place us in here, wherein to check our over-confidence. Locke.

PROBATORY. adj. [from probo, Latin.]

Serving for trial.

Job's afflictions were not vindictory punishments, but probatory chastisements to make trial of his graces. Bramhall.

PROBATIONUM EST. A Latin expression added to the end of a receipt, signifying it is tried or proved.

Vain the concern that you express,
That uncall'd Alas will possess
Your house and couch both day and night,
And that Macbeth was haunted leis
By Banquo's restless sprite:
Lend him but fifty louis d'or,
And you shall never see him more;
Take my advice, probation off.
Why do the gods indulge our fears,
Must to secure our rest?

My rising is thy fall,
And my promotion will be thy destruction. Milt.

Thou youngest virgin-daughter of the skies
Made in the last promotion of the blest;
Whole plains new pluck'd from paradise,
In spreading branches more sublimely rise. Dryd.

To PROMOTE. v. a. [promoveo, Latin; promouvoir, French.] To forward; to advance; to promote. Little used.

Never yet was honest man,
That ever drove the trade of love;
It is impossible, nor can Integrity our ends promote. Buckling

Making useless others, but promoting nothing. Fell.
PROMPT. adj. [prompt, French; promptus,
Latin.]

1. Quick; ready; acute; easy.
Very deferent and prompt in giving orders, as occasions required. Clarendon

Prompt eloquence How'd from their lips, in prose or numerous verse. Milton.

To the stern function of th' offended sky,
My prompt obedience bows. Pope.

2. Quick; petulant.
I was too hasty to condemn unheard;
And you, perhaps, too prompt in your replies. Dryd.

3. Ready without hesitation; wanting no new motive.
Tell him, I'm prompt
To lay my crown at his feet, and there to kneel. Shak.

A world of spinning, prompt to bloody rage. Dryden.
Still more long rebel flow,
Prompt to sink the state, than he to save. Prior.

4. Ready; told down: as, prompt payment.

5. Easy; unobstructed.
The reception of light into the body of the building was very prompt, both from without and from within. Brown.

To PROMPT. v. a. [promtare, Italian.]

1. To assist by private instruction; to help at a loss.

Sitting in some place, where no man shall prompt him, let the child translate his lesson. Acham.

You've put me now to such a part, which never
I shall discharge to th' life.

- Come, come, we'll prompt you. Shakpeare.
My voice shall found as you do prompt mine ear,
And I will troop and humbly my intents

To your well practis'd wite directions. Shakpeare.
None could hold the book so well to prompt and instruct this stage play, as the could. Bacon.

He needed not one to prompt him, because he could say the prayers by heart. Sallust.

2. To dictate.
Every one some time or other dreams he is reading books, in which case the invention prompts to readily, that the mind is impeded on. Addison.

Grace shines around her with serene beams,
And whispering angels prompt her golden dreams. Pope.

3. To incite; to instigate.
The Volscians find
Ready, when time shall prompt them, to make road Upon's again. Shakpeare.

Speak not by th' matter Which your heart prompts you to, but with such words

Put routed in your tongue. Shakpeare.
It they prompt us to anger, their defini- makes use of it to a further end, that the mind, being thus disquieted, may not be easily composed to prayer. Dupper.

Rage prompted them at length, and found them aim. Milton.

And occasion prompts their warm desires. Pope.

4. To remind.
The unconscionable imperfections of ourselves will hourly prompt us our corruption, and loudly tell us we are sons of earth. Brown.

PROMPTER. n. f. [from prompt.]

1. One who helps a publick speaker, by suggesting the word to him when he alters.

Were it my cue to fight, I should have known it Without a prompter. Shakpeare

In florid impotence he speaks,
And as the prompter breathes, the puppet squeaks. Pope

2. An admonisher; a reminder.
We understand our duty without a teacher, and acquit ourselves as we ought to do without a prompter. Whitridge.

PROMPTITUDE. n. f. [promptitude, Fr.
from promptus, Lat.] Readiness; quickness.

PROMPTLY. adv. [from prompt.] Readily;
quickly; expeditiously.

He that does his merchandise cheerfully, promptly, and readily, and the works of religion slowly, it is a sign that his heart is not right with God. Taylor

PROMPTNESS. n. f. [from prompt.] Readiness; quickness; alacrity.

Had not his stay been given him by that accidental tickle, his great courage and promptness of mind would have carried him directly forward to the enemy, till he had met him in the open plains of Persia. South

Fire and rapid motions, strong pulse, activity, and promptness in animal actions, are signs of strong fibres. Whitridge.

PROMPTUARY. n. f. [promptuare, Fr.
promptuarium, Latin.] A storehouse; a repository; a magazine.

This faculty is still expanded at top, serving as the basis of promptness, that furnishes forth matter for the formation of animal and vegetable bodies. Woodward.

PROMPTURE. n. f. [from prompt.] Suggestion; motion given by another; in-suggestion. Not used.

Though he hath fallen by prompture of the blood;
Yet hath he in him such a mind of honour,
That had he twenty heads to tender down
On twenty bloody blocks, he'd yield them up. Shakpeare

To PROMULGATE. v. a. [promulgo, Lat.] To publish; to make known by open declaration.

Those obit I know he nothing so much hateth as to promulgate, yet I hope that this will occur on him to put forth divers other goodly works. Spenser

Those, to whom he entrusted the promulgating of the gospel, had far different instructions. Deacy of Pater.

It is certain laws, by virtue of any function they receive from the promulgated will of the legislature, teach not a stranger, it by the law of nature every man hath not a power to punish offence against it. Locke.

PROMULGATION. n. f. [promulgatio, Lat.
from promulgate.] Publication; open exhibition.

The stream and current of this rule hath gone as far, it hath continued as long as the very promulgation of the gospel. Hooker.

External promulgation, or speaking the word, did not alter the same, in respect of the inward form or quality. White.

The very promulgation of the punishment will be part of the punishment, and anticipate the execution. South

PROMULGATOR. n. f. [from promulgate.]
Publisher; open teacher.

How generous is a calumny this appears from the faculty of the Christian religion, which excludes fraud and falsehood; to allow from the debasements and aims of its first promulgators. Deacy of Pater.

To PROMULGE. v. a. [from promulgo, Lat.] To promulgate; to publish; to teach openly.

The chief design of them is, to establish the truth of a new revelation in those countries, where it is first promulged and propagated. Atterbury.

PROMULGER. n. f. [from promulge.] Publisher; promulgator.

The promulgators of our religion, Jesus Christ and his apostles, raised men and women from the dead, not once only, but often. A. T. B.

PROMATOR. n. f. In anatomy, a muscle of the radius, of which there are two, that help to turn the palm downward. Dit.

PRONE. adj. [pronus, Latin]

1. Bending downward; not erect.
There wanted yet a creature not prone,
And brute as other creatures, but indu'd
With faculty of reason, might erect
His stature, and upright with front to see Govern the rest. Milton.

2. Lying with the face downward: contrary to supine.

Upon these three positions in man, wherein the spine can only be at right lines with the thigh, arise those postures, prone, supine, and erect. Brown.

3. Precipitous; headlong; going downward.

Down thither prone in flight
He speeds, and through the vast ethereal sky Sails between worlds. Milton.

4. Declivous; sloping.
Since the floods demand,
For their descent, a prone and sinking land:
Does not this due declivity declare
A wise director's providential care? Blackmore.

5. Inclined; propense; disposed. It has commonly an ill sense.

The labour of doing good, with the pleasure arising from the contrary, doth make men for the most part slower to the one and proner to the other, than that duty, prescribed them by law, can prevail sufficiently with them. H. Lee.

Those who are ready to confess him in a dig-ment and profession, are very prone to deny him in their doings. South.

If we are prone to sedition, and delight in change, there is no cure more proper than trade, which supplies business to the active, and wealth to the indigent. Addison.

Still prone to change, though still the slaves of fate. Pope.

PRONENESS. n. f. [from prone.]

1. The state of bending downward; not erectness.

It erectness be taken, as it is largely opposed unto proneness, or the posture of animals looking downwards, carrying their centers, or opposite part to the spine, directly towards the earth, it may admit of variation. Brown.

2. The state of lying with the face downward; not supineness.

3. Declivity; declivity.

4. Inclination; propension; disposition to ill.

The holy spirit saw that mankind is unto virtue hardly drawn, and that righteousness is the life accounted of, by reason of the proneness of our affections to that which delighteth. Hooker.

The soul being first from nothing brought,
When God's grace fails her, doth to nothing fall,
And thus declining proneness unto nothing,
Is even that in that we are born withal. Dwight

He instituted this worship, because of the carnality of their hearts, and the proneness of the people to idolatry. Tillotson

The proneness of good men to concupiscence want in whatever shape it appears. Atterbury

How great is the proneness of our nature, to comply with this temptation? Regis.

PROMG. n. f. [pronghen, Dutch, to liqueze.
Mishew.] A fork.

The cooks make no more ado, but slicing it into little goblets, pick it on a prong of iron, and hang it in a furnace. Sandys.

Whom his sea-coal prong threw by,
And safely turn'd his back to fly. Hudibras.

Be mindful
With iron teeth of rakes and prongs to move.
The crusted earth. Dryden

PRONITY. n. f. [from prone.] Proneness.
Not used.
Of this mechanick pronity, I do not see any good tendency. Marc.

PRO

PRONOUN. n. f. [pronom, Fr. pronomen, Latin.] A word that is used instead of the proper name.

I, thou, he; we, ye, they, are names given to persons, and used instead of their proper names, from whence they had the name of pronouns, as though they were not nouns themselves, but used instead of nouns. Clarke.

TO PRONOUNCE. v. a. [pronuncer, Fr. pronuncio, Lat.]

1. To speak; to utter.

He pronounced all these words unto me with his mouth. Jeremiah.

2. To utter solemnly; to utter confidently.

So good a lady, that no tongue could ever pronounce dishonour of her. Shakespeare.

I have pronounced of the word, faith the Lord, Jesus. So was his will.

Pronounced among the gods. Milton.

Clearly he pronounced the rigid interdiction. Milton.

Abraham pronounced a sentence of death against his brother. Locke.

3. To form or articulate by the organs of speech.

Language of man pronounced

By tongue of brute, and human sense expressed. Mit.

Though diversity of tongues continue, this would render the pronouncing them easier. Holmes.

4. To utter rhetorically.

TO PRONOUNCE. v. n. To speak with confidence or authority.

How confidently do ever men pronounce of themselves, and believe that they are then most precise, when they are most eager and impetuous; yet as sure this is far removed from the true genius of religion. Bacon of Prop.

Every fool may believe, and pronounce confidently; but wise men will, in matters of discourse, conclude firmly, and in matters of fact, act fairly. South.

PRONOUNCER. n. f. [from pronounce.]

One who pronounces.

The pronouncer thereof shall be condemned in expenses. Job.

PRONUNCIATION. n. f. [pronunciatio, from pronuncio, Lat. pronunciation, Fr.]

1. The act or mode of utterance.

The design of speaking being to communicate our thoughts by ready, easy, and graceful pronunciation, all kind of letters have been searched out that were serviceable for the purpose. Holmes.

It were easy to produce thousands of his verses, which are lame for want of half a foot, sometimes a whole one, and which no pronunciation can make otherwise. Dryden.

2. That part of rhetoric which teaches to speak in public with pleasing utterance and graceful gesture.

PROOF. n. f. [from prove.]

1. Evidence; testimony; convincing token; convincing argument; means of conviction.

That they all have always so testified, I see not how we should possibly win a proof more palpable than this. Holmes.

This has neither evidence of truth, nor proof sufficient to give it warrant. Holmes.

Though the manner of their trials should be altered, yet the proof of every thing must needs be by the testimony of such persons as the parties shall produce. Smyser.

That which I shall report will bear no credit. Were not the proof too high. Shakespeare.

One soul in this, whereof good proof this day affords. Milton.

Things of several kinds may admit and require several sorts of proofs, all which may be good in their kind. And therefore nothing can be more irrational than for a man to doubt of, or deny the truth of any thing, because it cannot be made out, by such kind of proofs of which the nature of such a thing is not capable. They ought not to expect either sensible proof, or demonstration of such matters as are not capable of such proofs, supposing them to be true. Watkins.

This, vers'd in death, th' infernal knight relates, And then for proof fulfill'd their common fates. Dryden.

Those intervening ideas, which serve to shew the agreement of any two others, are called proofs. Locke.

2. Test; trial; experiment.

Retire or taste thy folly, and learn by proof, Hell-born! not to contend with spirits of heav'n. Milton.

Samson,

This day to Dagon is a solemn feast: Thy strength they know surpassing human race, And now some publick proof thereof require To honour this great feast. Milton.

When the imagination hath contrived the frame of such an instrument, and conceives that the event must infallibly answer its hopes, yet then does it strangely deceive in the proof. Watkins.

Give, while he taught, and edify'd the more, Because he flew'd, by proof, 'twas early to be poor. Dryden.

My paper gives a timorous writer an opportunity of putting his abilities to the proof. Addison.

Here for ever must I stay, Sad proof how well a lover can obey. Pope.

3. Firm temper; impenetrability; the state of being wrought and hardened, till the expected strength is found by trial to be attained.

Add proof unto mine armour with thy prayers, And with thy blessing, bless my lance's point. Shakspeare.

To me the cues of lightning, fields are charms, Keen as my fabric, and as proof my arms, I ask no other blessing of my stars. Dryden.

See arms of proof, to which my self and thee; Chute thou the best. Dryden.

4. Armour hardened till it will abide a certain trial.

He Bellon's bridegroom, lapt in proof, Contorted him. Shakspeare.

5. In printing, the rough draft of a sheet when first pulled.

PROOF. adj. [This word, though used as an adjective, is only elliptically put for of proof.]

1. Impenetrable; able to resist.

Now put your shields before your hearts, and fight. Shakspeare.

With hearts more proof than shields. Shakspeare.

Opportunity I have have had To try thee, lift thee, and contents have found thee Proof against all temptation, as a rock Of adamant. Milton.

He past expression lov'd, Proof to diddon, and not to be lov'd. Dryden.

When the mind is thoroughly tintured, the man will be proof against all oppositions. Collier.

Guiltless of hate, and proof against desire; That all things weigh, and nothing can admire. Dryden.

When a capuchin, thought proof against bribes, had undertaken to carry on the work, he did a little better. Addison.

2. It has either to or against before the power to be resisted.

Imagin'd wife, Constant, mature, proof against all assaults. Milton.

Deep in the snowy Alps, a lump of ice By iron was harden'd to a mighty price; Proof to the sun it now securely lies, And the warm dog-star's hottest rage defies. Addison.

The god of day, To make him proof against the burning ray, His temples with celestial ointment wet. Addison.

PROOFLESS. adj. [from proof.] Unproved; wanting evidence.

Some were so manifestly weak and proofless, that he must be a very courteous adversary, that can grant them. Boyle.

TO PROP. v. a. [propere, Dutch.]

1. To support by placing something under or against.

PRO

What we by day

Lop overgrown, or prop, or bind, One night denodes. Mit.

2. To support by standing under or against. Like these, earth unsupported keeps its place, Though no fix bottom props the weighty mass. Creek.

Eternal snows the growing mass supply, Till the bright mountains prop th' incumbent sky; As Atlas fix'd each hoary pile appears. Pope.

3. To sustain; to support.

The nearer I find myself verging to that period, which is to be labour and sorrow, the more I prop myself upon those few supports that are left me. Pope.

PROP. n. f. [proppe, Dutch.] A support; a stay; that on which any thing relies.

The boy was the very staff of my age. Shakspeare.

You take my house, when you do take my life; That doth insult my house; you take my life, When you do take the means whereby I live. Shakspeare.

Some plants creep along the ground, or wave about other trees or props, and cannot support themselves. Boyle.

That he might on many props repose, He strengthens his own, and who his part did lose. Daniel.

Again, if by the body's prop we stand, If on the body's lie, her life depend, As Melancholy's on the fatal brand, The body's good the only would intend. Daniel.

Far left unsupported flower From her best prop to lat. Milton.

The current of his virtues found no stop, Till Cromwell came, his party's chief prop. Boyle.

'Twas a considerable time before the great monuments that fell rested in a firm posture, for the pop and keys, whereby they leaned one upon another, often failed. Boyle.

The props return Into thy house, that bore the burden'd vines. Daniel.

If it had been possible to find out any real addition foundation for Arrindale to rest upon, it would not have been left to stand upon artificial props, or to be built by subtlety and management. Watkins.

PROVOCABLE. adj. [from propagate.] Such as may be spread; such as may be continued by succession.

Such creatures as are produced each by its parent, constitute a distinct propagable class of creatures. Boyle.

TO PROPAGATE. v. a. [propago, Lat.]

1. To continue or spread by generation or successive production.

All that I eat, or drink, or shall beget, Is propagated curle! Mit.

Is it an elder brother's duty so To propagate his family and name; You would not have your die and buried with. Boyle.

From hills and dales the cheerful crows are sent, For echo hunts along, and propagates the sound. Daniel.

2. To extend; to widen.

I have upon a high and pleasant hill Foreign fortune to be thron'd: the hall of it mount

Is rank'd with all deserts, all kind of natures, That labour on the bosom of this sphere To propagate their fates. Shakspeare.

3. To carry on from place to place, to promote.

Some have thought the propagating of religion by arms not only lawful, but meritorious. Daniel.

Who are those that truth must propagate? Within the confines of my father's state. Boyle.

Those who seek truth only, and do not propagate nothing else, freely expose their point of view to the test. Boyle.

Because dense bodies conserve their heat a long time, and the densest bodies conserve their heat the longest, the vibrations of their parts are of a great nature; and therefore may be propagated a great distance.

conveying into the brain the impressions made upon the organs of sense. Newton.

4. To increase; to enquire.

Griefs of mine own he bore, in my breast,
Which thou wilt propagate, to have
With more of thine. Shakespeare.

And pleas'd to hear his propagated name. Dryden.

5. To generate.

Sacred notions, propagated in fancy, are hardly even totally eradicated. Carlyle.

7. PROPAGATE. v. n. To have offspring.

No need that thou
Shouldst propagate, already infinite,
And though all numbers absolute, though one. Milton.

PROPAGATION. n. f. [propagatio, Latin; propagation, French; from propagare.]

Continuance or diffusion by generation or successive production.
Men have souls rather by creation than propagation. Hobbes.

There are other secondary ways of the propagation of it, as lying in the same bed. Bacon.

There is not in all nature any spontaneous generation, but all come by propagation, wherein chance hath not the least part. Ray.

Old stakes of olive trees in plants revive;
But noble vines by propagation thrive. Dryden.

PROPAGATOR. n. f. [from propagare.]

1. One who continues by successive production.

2. A spreader; a promoter.

Socrates, the greatest propagator of morality, and a teacher to the unity of the Godhead, was taught in this talent, that he gained the name of the Teacher. Adison.

3. To PROPUL. v. a. [propello, Latin.] To drive forward.

As even winds the blood to be frothy that is propelled out of a vein of the heart. Huven.

This motion, in some human creatures, may be weak in respect to the vicinity of what is taken,
but not to be able to propel it. Abraham.

That overplus of motion would be too feeble and beard to propel to vast and ponderous a body, with that prodigious velocity. Bentley.

4. To PROPEND. v. n. [propendo, Latin, to lean forward.] To incline to any part,

to be disposed in favour of any thing.

My spirited brethren, I propend to you,
In relation to keep them full. Shakespeare.

1. Inclination or tendency of desire to any thing.

2. [from propendo, Latin, to weigh.] Pre-consideration; attentive deliberation;
pendency.

An act above the animal feelings, which are transient, and admit not of that attention, and pendency of action. Hale.

PROPELSE. adj. [propensus, Lat.] Inclined; disposed. It is used both of good and bad.

Women, propense and inclinable to holiness, be elated in good things, rather than carried away as captives. Hooker.

I have brought scandal
In feeble hearts, propense enough before
To waver, or fall off, and join with idols. Milton.

PROPESSION. n. f. [propension, French; propensity, Latin; from propensio, Latin; from propensio.]

Moral inclination; disposition to any thing good or bad.

Some misarranges might escape, rather through necessities of state, than any propensity of myself to murmurousness. King Charles.

So forcible are our propensions to mutiny, that we equally take occasions from benefits or injuries.

Government of the Tongue.

Let there be but propensity, and bent of will to religion, and there will be sedulity and indefatigable industry. South.

It requires a critical nicety to find out the genius or the propensions of a child. L'Estrange.

The natural propension, and the inevitable occasions of complaint, accidents of fortune. Levy.

He aims us with a mixture of grace, sufficient to overcome the corrupt propensities of the will. Rogers.

2. Natural tendency.

Books that of themselves have no propensities to any determinate place, do nevertheless move continuity and perpetually one way. Dicke.

This great attraction produces a great propensity to the putrescent alkaline constitution of the fluids. Richardson.

PROPER. adj. [proprie, Fr. proprius, Lat.]

1. Peculiar; not belonging to more; not common.

As for the virtues that belong unto moral righteness, and honesty of life, we do not mention them, because they are not proper unto christian men as they are christian, but do concern them as they are men. Hooker.

Men of learning hold it for a slip in judgment, when offer is made to demonstrate that as proper to one thing, which reason findeth common unto many. Hooker.

No fence the precious joys conceives,
Which in her private contemplations lie.

For, then the ravish'd spirit the senses leaves,
Hath her own powers and proper actions free. Daniel.

Of nought no creature ever formed aught,
For that is proper to the Almighty's hand. Daniel.

But men's rules, concerning the posture of the knees, are almost wholly proper to painting, and admit not any comparison with poetry. Dryden.

Outward object, that are extrinsic to the mind, and its own operations, proceeding from powers intrinsic and proper to itself, which become also objects of its contemplation, are the original of all knowledge. Locke.

They professed themselves servants of Jehovah their God, in a relation and respect peculiar and proper to themselves. Nequa.

2. Noting an individual.

A proper name may become common, when given to several beings of the same kind, as Caesar, Paul.

3. One's own. It is joined with any of the possessives: as, my proper, their proper.

The bloody look of law
You shall count it as to the latter letter.

After your own tone, yet, though each opinion stood in your action. Shakespeare.

4. Noting an individual.

With four what of your proper rage. W. B.

If we might determine it, our proper conceptions would be all voted as such. Griffith.

Now learn the difference at once, proper and proper, true and false, and a empty boat. Dryden.

5. Fit; accommodated; adapted; suitable;
qualified.

In Athens all was pleasure, mirth, and play,
All proper to the spring and youthful May. Dryden.

He is the only proper person of all others for an epic poem, who, to his natural endowments of a large invention, a ripe judgment, and a strong memory, has joined the knowledge of the liberal arts. Dryden.

6. Natural; original.

In our proper motion we ascend
Up to our native seat. Milton.

7. Fit; accommodated; adapted; suitable;
qualified.

In Athens all was pleasure, mirth, and play,
All proper to the spring and youthful May. Dryden.

He is the only proper person of all others for an epic poem, who, to his natural endowments of a large invention, a ripe judgment, and a strong memory, has joined the knowledge of the liberal arts. Dryden.

8. It seems in Shakespeare to signify, mere;
pure.

See thyself, devil,
Proper deformity seems not in the fiend
So horrid as in woman. King Lear.

L'Estrange.

PROPRIETY. adv. [from proprie.]

1. Fitly; suitably.

2. In a direct sense.

What does it what has life
And in the body propriety hath neither. Milton.

The nature of life are not propriety owing to the material disposition of things. Swift.

It is a nature to which the works of every man,
good as well as bad, are propriety his own. Rogers.

PROPRIETIES. n. f. [from proprie.]

1. The quality of being proper.

2. Talents.

PROPRIETY. n. f. [from proprie.]

1. Peculiar quality.

What peculiar propriety or quality is that, which being no where found but in it means, make them essential to have souls? Hooker.

A secondary essential mode, is any attribute of a thing, which is not of primary consideration, and is called a propriety. Watts.

2. Quality; disposition.

This conviction, not force, that must induce assent, and here the logic of a conquering sword has no great propriety that way, silence it may,
but convince it cannot. Dillon of Pity.

It is the propriety of an old farmer to find delight in reviewing his own villanies in others. South.

3. Right of possession.

Some have been deceived into an opinion, that the inherent use of rule, over men, and propriety in things, spring from the same original, and were to depend by the same rule. Locke.

Propriety, whose original is from the right a man has to the use of the inferior creatures, for subsistence and comfort, is for the sole advantage of the proprietor, so that he may even deny the thing that he has propriety in. Locke.

4. Not being held in one's own right.

For many a one, being yearly flattered,
And propriety in plenty crowded,
Accept of your posterity. Dryden.

5. The thing possessed.

In a thing unpossessed
I could have thee but as a propriety. Shakespeare.

Now under such a name the true, so governing, where we are to be, where propriety is well used. Swift.

6. No rights or right. I know not which of the kinds in the following lines.

He could not in a propriety of his,
Propriety, and propriety of his,
And so I am to say he is a man. Shakespeare.

7. Something useful; an appendage; a theoretical term.

I will draw a bill of propriety, such as our play wants. Shakespeare.

The purple garment, and the hawk's eyes,
High propriety are not to be seen. Dryden.

Greenshield was the name of the propriety man in that time, who furnished implements for the actors.
Pope.

8. Propriety for propriety. Any thing

PROPHET, n. f. [prophete, Fr. πρόφητα.]

1. One who tells future events; a predictor; a foreteller.

Every flower
Did as a prophet weep what it forelaw,
In Hector's wrath. Shakespeare
Jesters oft prove prophets. Shakespeare
O prophet of glad tidings! smiler
Of utmost hope! Milton

He lov'd to fast,
As if he fear'd each day would be his last;
Too true a prophet to foretell the fate,
That should to soon divide then happy state. Dryden
God, when he makes the prophet, does not unmake the man. Tuckey

2. One of the sacred writers empowered by God to display futurity.

His champions are the prophets and apostles. Shakespeare
It buildeth her faith and religion upon the sacred and canonical scriptures of the holy prophets and apostles, as upon her main and prime foundation. Wile

PROPHETESS, n. f. [prophetissa, Fr. from prophet.] A woman that foretells future events.

He shall lightly very heart with sorrow,
And say thou Margaret was a prophetess. Shakespeare
That it is conform to the word of God, to us saying to answer, the practice of Minam the prophetess, when she answered the men as her tongue with approve. Pecham
If my love but once were crown'd,
Four prophetesses, my grief would cease. Pier

PROPHETICAL, adj. [prophetique, Fr. prophetick.] From prophet.

1. Foretelling or foretelling future events.

Say, why
Upon this blasted heath you stop our way,
With such prophetic greeting? Shakespeare
The counsel of a wife and then prophetick counsel was forgotten. Shakespeare
Some perfumes procure prophetick at dreams. Bacon

Till old experience do attain
To something like prophetic strain. Milton

Some famous prophetic pictures represent the fate of England by a mole, a creature blind and busy, smooth and deceitful, continually working under ground, but now and then to be discerned in the surface. Stillingfleet

No arguments made a stronger impression on these pagan converts, than the predictions relating to our Saviour in those old prophetic writings deposited among the hands of the greatest enemies to christianity, and owned by them to have been extant in my ages before his appearance. Addison

2. It has of before the thing foretold.

The more I know, the more my fears augment, And tears are oft prophetic of the event. Dryden

PROPHETICALLY, adv. [from prophetic.] With knowledge of futurity; in manner of a prophecy.

He is to prophetically proud of an heroic end-gelling, that he raves at saying nothing. Shakespeare

This great success among Jews and Gentiles, part of it historically true at the compiling of the articles, and part of it prophetically true then, and fulfilled after, was a most effectual argument to give authority to this book. Hannond

She sigh'd, and thus prophetically spoke. Dryden

To PROPHETIZE, v. n. [prophetize, Fr. from prophet.] To give predictions.

Not in use.

For mythenous things of faith rely
On the propinquity, heaven's authority. Dryden

PROPHYTABLE, n. f. [proportion, Lat.].

1. Comparative relation of one thing to another; ratio.

Let any man's wisdom determine by lessening or territory, and increasing the number of inhabitants what proportion is requisite to the people; and region in such a manner, that the land shall be neither too narrow for those whom it feedeth, nor capable of a greater multitude. Robinson

By proportion to these rates, we may judge of the obligation that lies upon all sorts of magistrates. Locke

Three high equivalent and neighbouring value
By lot are parted; but high heav'n thy share,
In equal balance weigh'd 'gainst earth and hell,
Lings up the adverse scale, and fluns proportion. Pope

2. Settled relation of comparative quantity; equal degree.

Greater visible good does not always raise merit, in proportion to the greatness it is acknowledged to have, though every little trouble leads on work to get rid of it. Locke

He must be little skill'd in the world, who thinks that men's talking much or little shall hold proportion only to their knowledge. Locke

Several notions are recovered out of their ignorance, in proportion as they conceive more of it with those of the reformed churches. Locke

In proportion as this reformation grew, the former before us seemed to vanish. Locke

3. Harmonick degree.

His volant touch
Infus'd through all proportions, low and high,
Fleth, and purf'd transverse the resonant fugue.

Milton.

4. Symmetry; adaptation of one to another.

Measure is that which perfecteth all things, because every thing is for some end; neither can that thing be available to any end, which is not proportionable thereto: and to proportion as well excellencies as defects, are opposite.

Hooker.

It must be mutual in proportion due Giv'n and receiv'd.

Milton.

None of the perfect age is equal in the strength, proportion, and knitting of his limbs, to the Herculean of the male.

Dryden.

The proportions are so well observed, that nothing appears to an advantage, or diminishes itself above the rest.

Addison.

Harmony, with ev'ry grace,

Plays in the fair proportions of her face.

Mrs. Carter.

5. Form; size.

All things receiv'd, do such proportion take,
As those things have, wherein they are receiv'd;
So little glass-like faces make,
And narrow webs on narrow frames are weav'd.

Dantes.

To PROPORTION. v. a. [proportionner, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To adjust by comparative relation.

Till body up to spirit work, in bounds

Proportion'd to each kind.

Milton.

In the lots of an object, we do not proportion our goal to the real value it bears, but to the value our fancies set upon it.

Addison.

2. To form symmetrically.

Nature had proportion'd her without any fault, quickly to be discovered by the senses; yet altogether formed not to make up that harmony that equal delights in.

Sedgwick.

PROPORTIONABLE. adj. [from proportion.]

Adjusted by comparative relation; such as is fit.

His commandments are not grievous, because he offers us an assistance, proportionable to the difficulty.

Tillotson.

It was endowed with an hundred and twenty trumpets, adorned with a proportionable number of other instruments.

Aldrich.

PROPORTIONABLY. adv. [from proportion.]

According to proportion; according to comparative relation.

The need ought to examine all the grounds of probability, and up in a due balance the whole, not to receive it as proportionally to the probability of the greater grounds of probability, on one side or the other.

Locke.

The parts of a great thing are great, and the more proportionally large, the more in a large country.

Let not.

Though reason be more eminently necessary to those in it, it is of as much use to the common people, as proportionally to the service to publick happiness in every inferior relation.

Boyle.

PROPORTIONAL. adj. [proportionnel, Fr. from proportion.]

Having a settled comparative relation; having a certain degree of any quality compared with something else.

The serpent lives,

lives, as thou hadst life, and gains to live as man

the degree of life, it does out of living to us, as liberty taking to attain

Prop. it is absent, which cannot be but to be gods or angels.

Milton.

Four numbers are said to be proportional, when the first contains the second, or is contained by the second, as often as the third contains the fourth, or is contained by the fourth.

Cotes.

It is but swifter in bodies than in vacuo, in the proportion of the lines which measure the refraction of the bodies, the forces of the bodies to reflect and refract light, are very nearly proportional to the densities of the same bodies.

Newton.

PROPORTIONALITY. n. f. [from proportion.]

tional.] The quality of being proportional.

All sense, as grateful, dependeth upon the equality of the proportionality of the motion or impression made.

Grew.

PROPORTIONALLY. adv. [from proportion.] In a stated degree.

It these circles, whilst their centres keep their distances and positions, could be made less in diameter, their intersecting one with another, and by consequence the mixture of the heterogeneous rays, would be proportionally diminished.

Newton.

PROPORTIONATE. adj. [from proportion.]

Adjusted to something else, according to a certain rate or comparative relation.

The connection between the end and any means is adequate, but between the end and means proportionate.

Grew.

The use of spectacles, by an adequate connection of truths, gave men occasion to think of microscopes and telescopes, but the invention of burning glass depended on a proportionate, for that figure, which contracts the images of any body, that is, the rays by which it is seen, will, in the same proportion, contract the heat wherewith the rays are accompanied.

Grew.

In the state of nature, one man comes by no absolute power to use a criminal according to the passion or heats of his own will; but only to retribute to him, to far as conscience dictates, what is proportionate to his transgression.

Locke.

To PROPORTIONATE. v. a. [from proportion.]

To adjust according to settled rates to something else.

The parallelism and due proportionate inclination of the axis of the earth.

Mor.

Since every single particle hath an innate gravitation toward all others, proportionate by matter and distance, it evidently appears, that the outward atoms of the chaos would necessarily tend inwards, and descend from all quarters towards the middle of the whole space.

Bentley.

PROPORTIONATENESS. n. f. [from proportionate.] The state of being by comparison adjusted.

By this congruity of those faculties to their proper objects, and by the interests and proportionateness of these objective impressions upon their respective faculties, accommodated to their reception, the feeble nature hath to much of perception as is necessary for its feeble being.

Hale.

PROPOSAL. n. f. [from propose.]

1. Scheme or design propounded to consideration or acceptance.

It was proposals once a woman heard,

We should couple them to a quick return.

Milton.

The work you mention, will infinitely recommend itself, when your name appears with the proposals.

Madison.

2. Offer to the mind.

Upon the proposal of a respectable object, a man's choice will induce much choice to accept of that rule.

South.

This truth is not likely to be entertained readily upon the proposal of a proposal.

Atkinson.

To PROPOSE. v. a. [proposer, Fr. propono, Lat.] To offer to the consideration.

Raphael to Adam: doubt propos'd,

Bees content and fast thus reply'd.

Milton.

My chief aim is to treat only of those, who have chiefly propos'd to themselves the principal reward of their labours.

Tatler.

In learning any thing, there should be as little as possible first propos'd to the mind at once, and that being understood, proceed then to the next adjoining part.

White.

To PROPOSE. v. n. To lay schemes. Not in use.

Run thee into the parlour,

There shalt thou find my cousin Beatrice,

Proposing with the pounce and Claudio.

Shakespeare.

PROPOSER. n. f. [from propose.] One that offers any thing to consideration.

Faith is the assent to any proposition, not made out by the deductions of reason, but upon the credit of the proposer as coming from God. Locke.

He provided a statute, that whoever proposed any alteration to be made, should do it with a rope about his neck; if the matter proposed were generally approved, then it should pass into a law; if it went in the negative, the proposer to be immediately hanged.

Swift.

PROPOSITION. n. f. [proposition, Fr. propositio, Lat.]

1. One of the three parts of a regular argument.

The first proposition of the precedent argument is not necessary.

White.

2. A sentence in which any thing is affirmed or denied.

Claudianus, labouring how to reconcile these two propositions, that all things are done by fate, and yet that something is in our own power, cannot extricate himself.

Hammond.

Contingent propositions are of a dubious quality, and they cause opinion only, and not divine faith.

White.

The compounding of the representation of things, with an affirmation or negation, makes a proposition.

Hale.

3. Proposal; offer of terms.

The enemy that propositions, such as upon delivery of a strong fortified town, after a handsome defence, are usually granted.

Clarendon.

PROPOSITIONAL. adj. [from proposition.]

If it has a singular subject in its propositional sense, it is always ranked with universals.

Watts.

To PROPOUND. v. n. [propono, Lat.]

1. To offer to consideration; to propose.

The parliament, which now is held, decreed

Whatever pleas'd the king but to propound.

To leave as little as I may unto fancy, which is wild and irregular, I will propound a rule.

Don't thou to the Son of God propound

To what hip thee?

Milton.

The existence of the church hath been propounded as an object of our faith in every age of Christianity.

Peacock.

The greatest stranger must propound the argument.

More.

The arguments, which Christianity propounds to us, are reasonable encouragements to bear sufferings patiently.

Tillotson.

2. To offer; to exhibit.

A spirit rais'd from death of under ground,

That will make answer to such questions,

As by your grace shall be propounded him.

Shakspeare.

PROPOSITOR. n. f. [from propound.] He that propounds; he that offers; proposer.

PROPRIETARY. n. f. [proprietaire, Fr. from propriety.]

Possessor in his own right.

It is a mistake to think ourselves stewards in favour of God's gifts, and proprietors in others: they are all equally to be employed, according to the denotation of the donor.

God of the Tongue.

PROPRIETARY. adj. Belonging to a certain owner.

Though sheep, which are proprietors, are seldom matted, yet they are not apt to migrate.

Grew.

PROPRIETOR. n. f. [from proprius, Lat.]

A possessor in his own right.

Man, by being master of his own, and proprietor of his own person, and the actions or labors of it, had still in himself the great foundation of property.

Locke.

Though they are scattered on the wings of the morning, and remain in the uttermost parts of the sea, even there shall his right hand fetch them out, and lead them home to their ancient proprietor.

Rogers.

PROPRIETRESS. n. f. [from proprietarius.] A female possessor in her own right; a mistress.

A big belched bitch borrowed another bitch's kennel to lay her burden in; the proprietress demanded possession, but the other begged her leave.

L'Estrange.

P R O

PROPRIETY. n. f. [propriété, Fr. proprietus, Lat.]

1. Peculiarity of possession; exclusive right.

You that have promis'd to yourselves propriety in love,

Know women's hearts like straws do move.

Benefit of peace, and vacation for poets, render it necessary by laws to secure propriety. Hammond
That, wedded love! my lawless law, true source
Of human offspring, to propriet!

In Paradox of all things common else. Milton

They secure propriety and peace. Dryden

To this we owe not only the safety of our persons and the propriety of our possessions, but our improvement in the several arts. Atterbury

2. Accuracy; justness.

Common use, that is the rule of propriety, affords some aid to settle the signification of language.

Propriety for propped. [from prop.] Suffixed by tonus prop.

Seen her cell tad Elusa spread,

Prept on some tomb, a neighbour of the dead.

Pope

To PROPUGN. v. a. [propugno, Latin.]

To defend; to vindicate.

Thankfulness is our meet tribute to those sacred champions for propugn of our faith. Hammond

PROPUGNATION. n. f. [propugnatio, from propugno, Lat.] Defence.

What propugnatio is in one man's valour,

To stand the push and enmity of those

This quarrel would excite? Shakespeare

PROPUGNER. n. f. [from propugn.] A defender.

So zealous *propugn*ers are they of their native

ered, that they are importunately diligent to instruct men in it, and in all the little sophistries for defending it. Gov. comment of the tongue

PROPUSSION. n. f. [propulsus, Lat.] The act of driving forward.

Joy worketh by propulsion of the moisture of the brain, when the spirits dilate and occupy more room. Bacon

The evanescent solid and fluid will cease differ, and the extremities of those small canals will by propulsion be carried off with the fluid continually.

Arbutnot

PRORE. n. f. [prora, Latin.] The prow;

the forepart of a ship. A poetical word used for a rhyme.

There no vessel, with vermilion prorer

Or bark of tullock, glides from shore to shore.

Pope

PROROGATION. n. f. [prorogatio, from prorogo, Lat. prerogation, Fr.]

1. Continuance; state of lengthening out to a distant time; prolongation.

The fulness and effluence of man's enjoyments

in the state of innocence, might seem to leave no place for hope, in respect of any farther addition,

but only of the prorogation and future continuance of what already he possessed. South

2. Interruption of the session of parliament by the regal authority.

It would seem extraordinary, if an inferior court should take a matter out of the hands of the high court of parliament, during a prorogation. Swift

To PROROGUE. v. a. [prorogo, Lat. pro- ruer, Fr.]

1. To protract; to prolong.

He prorogued his government, still threatening to dismiss himself from public cares. Dryden

2. To put off; to delay.

My life were better ended by their hate,

Than death prorogued, wanting of thy love.

Shakespeare

3. To withhold the session of parliament to a distant time.

By the king's authority alone they are assembled,

and by him alone are they prorogued and dissolved, but each house may adjourn itself. Bacon

P R O

PRORUPTION. n. f. [proruptus, from pro-

rumpo, Lat.] The act of bursting out.

Others ground this disruption upon their continued or protracted time of delivery, whereas, excluding but one day, the latter brood, impatient by a torrid prorupcion, anticipates their period of exhalation. Brown

PROSAICK. adj. [prosaicus, Fr. prosaicus, from prosa, Lat.] Belonging to prose;

resembling prose.

To PROSCRIBE. v. a. [proscribo, Lat.]

1. To censure capitally; to doom to destruction.

Robert Vere, earl of Oxford, through the malice of the peers, was banished the realm, and pro- scribed. Spenser

I did for thee

Thy murder of thy brother, being so build,

And writ him in the list of my proscribed

After thy fact. Ben Jonson

Follow'd and pointed at by fools and boys,

But decried and proscribed by men of sense.

Rapin

In the year 325, as is well known, the Arian doctrines were proscribed and anathematized in the famous council of Nice, consisting of 318 bishops, very unanimous in their resolutions, excepting a few reclusants. Waterland

2. To interdict. Not in use.

He shall be found,

And taken or proscribed this happy ground. Dryd.

Some utterly proscribe the name of chance, as a word of impious and profane signification; and indeed, if taken by us in that sense in which it was used by the heathen, so as to make any thing

casual, in respect of God himself, their exception ought justly to be admitted. South

PROSCRIBER. n. f. [from proscribere.] One that dooms to destruction.

The triumph and proscriber had descended to us in a more hideous form, if the emperor had not taken care to make friends of Virgil and Horace.

Dryden

PROSCRIPTION. n. f. [proscriptio, Latin.]

Doom to death or confiscation.

You took his voice who should be puffed to die,

In our black sentence and proscription. Shalf.

Sylla's old troops

Are needy and poor; and have but left to expect

From Civiline new bills and new proscriptions.

Ben Jonson

For the title of proscription or forfeiture, the emperor hath been judge and party, and justified himself. Bacon

PROSE. n. f. [prosa, French; prosa, Latin.]

Language not restrained to harmonick sounds or set number of syllables; discousse not metrical.

Things unattempted yet in prose or rhyme. Milt.

The reformation of prosa was owing to Boccaccio, who is the standard of purity in the Italian tongue,

though many of his phrases are become obsolete.

Dryden

A poet lets you into the knowledge of a device better than a prose writer, as his descriptions are often more dilute. Addison

Prose men alone for private ends,

I thought, forsook their ancient friends. Prior.

I will be full your friend in prosa:

Esteem and friendship to express:

Will not require poetick dress. Swift

My head and heart thus flowing through my quill,

Vere man and prosa man, term me which you will.

Pope

To PROSECUTE. v. a. [prosequor, pro- secutus, Lat.]

1. To pursue; to continue endeavours after any thing.

I am belov'd of beauteous Hernia,

Why should not I then prosecute my right? Shalf.

I must not omit a father's timely care,

To prosecute the means of thy deliverance

By ransom. Milton

That which is morally good is to be desired and prosecuted; that which is evil is to be avoided.

Wilkins

P R O

He prosecuted this purpose with strength of argument and close reasoning, without unobscured fallacies. Lacke

2. To continue; to carry on.

The same reasons, which induced you to enter tain this war, will induce you also to prosecute the same. Hayward

All resolute to prosecute their ire,

Seeking their own and country's cause to free

He infected Oxford, which gave them the name reason to prosecute the fortifications. Clarendon

With heretics

She prosecutes her joys, and thus replies. Dryden

3. To proceed in confutation or disqu-tion of any thing.

An infinite labour to prosecute those things, for as they might be exemplified in religious and civil actions. Hooker

4. To pursue by law; to sue criminally.

5. To prosecute differs from to persecute; to persecute always implies some cruelty, iniquity, or injustice; to prosecute, is to proceed by legal measures, either with or without just cause.

PROSECUTION. n. f. [from prosecute.]

1. Pursuit; endeavour to carry on.

Many offer at the effects of friendship, but they do not hold; they are mounting in the beginning, but they fall, and are in the prosecution. South

Their zeal only of the British power, as well as their prosecutions of commerce and pursuits of universal monarchy, will fix them in their aversion towards us. Addison

2. Suit against a man in a criminal cause.

Persons at law may know, when they are not to communicate all they have put a stop to their guilt, and when they are fit for the same during their prosecution of it. Kettwell

PROSPECT. n. f. [prospectus, Latin.]

1. View of something distant.

Eden and all the coast in prospect lay. Milton.
The Jews being under the economy of immediate revelation, might be supposed to have had a prospect into that heaven, whence their law descended. Decay of Piety.

It is better to marry than to burn, says St. Paul; a little burning felt pushes us more powerfully, than greater pleasures in prospect allure. Locke.

2. Place which affords an extended view.

Him God beholding from his prospect high,
Whom past, present, future he beholds,
He spoke. Milton.

3. Series of objects open to the eye.

There is a very noble prospect from this place, on the one side lies a vast extent of seas, that runs broad farther than the eye can reach; just opposite stands the green promontory of Surrentum, and on the other side the whole circuit of the bay of Naples. Addison.

4. Object of view.

Man to himself
A large prospect, rais'd above the level
Of his low creeping thoughts. Denham.

Present, sad prospect! can he aught delay,
But what affects his melancholy eye?
The beauties of the ancient fabric lost
In chaos of craggy hills, or lengths of dreary coast.

5. View delineated; a picturesque representation of a landscape.

Claude Lorrain, on the contrary, was convinced, that taking nature as he found it seldom produced beauty, his pictures are a composition of the various beauties which he has previously made from various beautiful scenes and prospects. Remondet.

6. View into futurity; opposed to retrospect.

To be king,
Stands not within the prospect of belief,
No more than to be Cæsar. Shakespeare.

To him, who hath a prospect of the different state of perfect happiness or misery that attends all men after this life, the measures of good and evil are wholly changed. Locke.

If there be no prospect beyond the grave, the inferior is right; let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we shall die. Locke.

Against himself his gratitude must mind,
By favours past, not future prospects gain'd. Smith.

Regarding to something future,
Is he a prudent man, as to his temporal estate,
Who lives but only for a day, with out any prospect of provision for the remaining part of his life. Edington.

7. PROSPECT. v. a. [prospectus, Latin.] To look forward.

8. PROSPECTIVE. adj. [from prospect.] Viewing at a distance.

Aching with foresight,
The French king and king of Sweden are comparative, industrious and prospective too in this. Chiff.

9. PROSPER. v. a. [prosperare, Latin.] To make happy; to favour.

Kind gods, how ye
Vouchsafe and prosper him. Shakespeare.

All things concur to prosper our design;
We need not prosper any love but mine. Dryden.

10. PROSPERITY. n. f. [prosperitas, Latin.] To be prosperous; to be successful.

My word shall not return void, but accomplish
That which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing
Which I do. Shakespeare.

11. Prosperities were used by little and little, and things Grew up with him more and more. 2 Maccabees.

12. To prosper, thou prosperity
Shall have assur'd us. Milton.

To thrive; to come forward.

At times do prosper best, when they are Advers'd to the better; a nursery of flocks ought to Be on a more barren ground, than that whereunto
We remove them. Bacon.

PRO

The plants, which he had set, did thrive and prosper. Cowley.
She visits how they prosper'd, bud, and bloom.

That neat kind of acer, whereof violins and musical instruments are made, prospers well in these parts. Brown.

PROSPERITY. n. f. [prosperitas, Latin.] Success; attainment of wishes; good fortune.

Prosperity, in regard of our corrupt inclination to abuse the blessings of Almighty God, doth prove a thing dangerous to the souls of men. Hooker.

God's justice reaps that glory in our calamities, which we robbed him of in our prosperity. King Charles.

PROSPEROUS. adj. [prosperus, Latin.] Successful; fortunate.

Your good advice, which still hath been both grave
And prosperous. Shakespeare.

Lather late to bear prosperous or adverse. Milton.
May he find
A happy passage, and a prosperous wind. Denham.

PROSPEROUSLY. adv. [from prosperous.] Successfully; fortunately.

Prosperously I have attempted, and With bloody passage led your wars, even to The gates of Rome. Shakespeare.

In 1596, was the second invasion upon the main territories of Spain, prosperously achieved by Robert earl of Essex, in concert with the earl of Nottingham. Bacon.

Those, who are prosperously unjust, are inticed to pancey, but afflicted virtue is stabled with remonstrances. Dryden.

PROSPEROUSNESS. n. f. [from prosperous.] Prosperity.

PROSPERITY. n. f. [prosperitas, Latin.] The act of looking forward.

PROSTERNATION. n. f. [from prosternere, Latin.] Dejection; dejection; state of being cast down; act of casting down.

fired up a fever, watching, and prosternation of spirits. Wigman.

PROSTHESIS. n. f. [προσθησις.] In surgery, that which fills up what is wanting, as when fistulous ulcers are filled up with flesh. Diet.

To PROSTITUTE. v. a. [prostitutus, Latin.] To prostitute, to sell.

1. To sell to wickedness; to expose to crimes for a reward. It is commonly used of women sold to whoredom by others or themselves.

Do not prostitute thy daughter, to cause her to be a whore. Leviticus.

Marrying or prostituting,
Rep or adultery. Milton.

Who shall prevail with them to do that themselves which they beg of God, to spare his people and his heritage, to prostitute them no more to their own sinister designs? Decay of Piety.

Amotions, consecrated to children, husbands, and parents, are vilely prostituted and thrown away upon a hand at law. Addison.

2. To expose upon vile terms.

It were unfit, that so excellent and glorious a reward, as the gospel promises, should hoop down like fruit upon a full laden bough, to be plucked by every idle and wanton hand, that heaven should be prostituted to sordid men. Tillotson.

PROSTITUTE. adj. [prostitutus, Latin.] Vicious for hire; sold to infamy or wickedness; sold to whoredom.

Their common loves, a lewd and sordid pack
By sloth corrupted, by disorder led,
Made bold by want, and prostitute for bread. Prior.

PROSTITUTION. n. f. [from the verb.] 1. A hireling; a mercenary; one who is set to sale.

At open fulsome bawdry they rejoice,
Bute prostitute! thus dost thou gain thy bread. Dryden.

No hireling she, no prostitute to praise. Pope.
2. [prostitutum, Latin.] A publick strumpet.
From every point they come,
Then dread no dearth of prostitutes at Rome. Dryden.

1. The act of selling to sale; the state of being set to sale.

2. The life of a publick strumpet.
An infamous woman, having passed her youth in a most dissolute state of prostitution, now gains her livelihood by reducing others. Spectator.

PROSTRATE. adj. [prostratus, Latin.] The accent was formerly on the first syllable. Sidney and Spenser seem to differ.

1. Lying at length.
Once I lay with dread oppress'd
Her whom I dread; so that with prostitute lying,
Her long the earth in love's clut clothing drifted. Sidney.

Before our Britomart the fell prostitute, Spenser.
He heard the welkin louds would undermine
His city's wall, and lay his towers prostrate. Pope.
Groveling and prostitute on yon lake of fire. Milton.

2. Lying at mercy.
Look graciously on thy prostrate thrall. Shakespeare.
At thy knees lie
Our prostrate bolones for't with prayers to tries
If any hospitable right, or boon
On other nature, such as have been wonne
By laws of other houses, thou wilt give. Chapman.

3. Thrown down in humblest adoration.
The warning found was no longer heard, but the churches were filled, the pavement covered with bodies prostrate, and washed with tears of devout joy. Hooker.

Let us to the place
Repairing where he judg'd us, prostrate fall
Before him reverent, and there confess Humbly our faults, and pardon beg. Milton.
While prostrate here in humble grief I lie,
Kind virtuous drops just bathing in my eye. Pope.

To PROSTRATE. v. a. [prostratus, Latin.] This was accented anciently on the first syllable.

1. To lay flat; to throw down.
In the insects many they slow, and fired divers places, prostrating two parties almost entirely. Hopwood.

A form that all things doth prostrate,
Finding a tree alone who comforts,
Be it on it I find it, it to comfort. Spenser.

Stake and bind up your weath'ly plants in mat the winds, before they come too sorely, and in a moment prostrate a whole year's labour. Locke.

The drops falling thicker, faster, down, and force, beating down the corn from the trees, prostrating and laying our growing in the fields. Woodward.

2. [se prosternere, Latin.] To throw down in adoration.
Some have prostrated themselves before the image
in the day, and so often in the night. Hopwood.

PROSTERNATION. n. f. [prosternation, Latin.] from prostitute.
1. The act of falling down in adoration.
Not only a direct protest against authority,
a powerful energy, not to be wither'd, but any consistent adherence to it and duty. Hooker.

The worship of the gods had been kept up in temples, with dances, images, sacrifices, hymns and protestations. Stillingfleet.

The teacher, they had substituted to the education, they received by a breadth fence is devotion, marked with a great, prostration of reason than of body. South.

themselves, and yet to teach it in others that should deal with them, for they had often made their lives triumph over most terrible dangers, never dismayed, and ever fortunate. Sidney.

I hope

That your wisdom will direct my thought,
Or that your prowe can me yield relief. Spenser.
Henry the fifth, by his prowe, conquered all France. Shakespeare.

Nor should thy prowe want praise and esteem,
But that 'tis shewn in treason. Shakespeare.

Those are they
First seen in acts of prowe eminent,
And great exploits, but of true virtue void. Milton.

Michael, of celestial armies prince;
And thou in military prowe next,
Gabriel! Milton.

The vigour of this arm was never vain,
And that my wonted prowe I retain,
Witness these heaps of slaughter on the plain. Dryden.

2. Brave; valiant. [from prowe.]

The fairest of her sex, Angelina,
His daughter, fought by many prowest knights. Milton.

To PROWL. v. a. [Of this word the etymology is doubtful: the old dictionaries write prole, which the dreamer Cassian derives from προλαλῶ, ready, quick. Skinner, a far more judicious etymologist, deduces it from proveler, a diminutive formed by himself from prover, to prey, French: perhaps it may be formed, by accidental corruption, from patrol.] To rove over.

He prows each place, full in new colours drest,
Sucking one's ill, another to infect. Sidney.

To PROWL. v. n. To wander for prey; to Each grove and thicket, pry in ev'ry shape,

Lest hid in some th' arch-hypocrite escape. Dryden.

I wak'd, and looking round the how'r
Search'd ev'ry tree, and pry'd on ev'ry flow'r.
If any where by chance I might espie
The rural poet of the melody. Dryden.

Nor need we with a prying eye survey
The distant skies, to find the milky way. Creech.
Actions are of so mixt a nature, that as we pry into them, or observe some parts more than others they take different hints, and put contrary interpretations on them.

All these I frankly own without denying;
But where has this Praxiteles been prying?

Addison.

PSALM. n. f. [psalme, pseume, Fr. ψαλμος.] A holy song.

The choice and flower of all things profitable in other books, the psalms do both more briefly contain and more movingly express, by reason of that poetical form wherewith they are written. Hooker.
St. rufhold was made groom of the chamber, for turning certain of David's psalms into verse.

Peacham.

Those just spirits that wear victorious psalms,
Hymns devote and holy psalms
Singing continually.

Milton.

In another psalm, he speaks of the wisdom and power of God in the creation.
She, her daughters, and her maids, meet together at all the hours of prayer in the day, and chant psalms, and other devotions, and spend the rest of their time in such good works, and innocent diversions, as render them fit to return to their psalms and prayers. Law.

PSALMIST. n. f. [psalmiste, French; from psalm.] A writer of holy songs.

How much more rational is this system of the psalmist, than the pagans scheme in Virgil, where the deity is represented as raising a storm, and another as laying it?

that which relies it. More.

By their virtuous behaviour they compensate the hardness of their favour, and by the puchritude of their souls make up what is wanting in the beauty of their bodies. South.

That there is a great puchritude and comeliness of proportion in the leaves, flowers, and fruits of plants, is attested by the general verdict of mankind. Ray.

To PUKE. v. n. [puier, Fr.]

To PULL. v. a. [pullian, Sax.]

1. To draw violently toward one: opposed to push, which is to drive from one.

What they seem to offer us with the one hand,
the same with the other they pull back. Hooker.

He put forth his hand, and pulled the dove in.

His hand which he put forth dried up, so that he could not pull it in again. 1 Kings.

Pull them out like sleep for the slaughter, and prepare them for the day of slaughter. Jeremiah.

They pulled away the shoulder, and stopped their ears. Zechariah.

All fortune never crushed that man, whom good fortune deceived not; I therefore have counselled my friends to place all things she gave them so as she might take them from them, not pull them.

2. To draw forcibly; commonly with on or off, or some other particle.

He was not so desirous of wars, as without just cause of his own to pull them upon him.

A boy came in great hurry to pull off my boots.

3. To pluck; to gather.

When bounteous Autumn rears his head,
He joys to pull the ripen'd pear. Dryden.

Flax pulled in the bloom, will be whiter and

He hath turn'd aside my ways, and pulled me in pieces; he hath made me desolate. Lamentations.

5. To PULL down. To subvert; to demolish.

Although it was judged in form of a statute, that he should be banished, and his whole estate confiscated, and his house pulled down, yet his case even then had no great blot of ignominy. Bacon.

In political affairs, as well as mechanical, it is far easier to pull down than build up; for that structure, which was above ten summers a-building, and that by no mean artists, was destroyed in a moment. Hovel.

When God is said to build or pull down, 'tis not to be understood of an house; God builds and unbuilds worlds. Burnet.

6. To PULL down. To degrade.

He begg'd the gods to turn blind fortune's wheel,
to raise the wretched, and pull down the proud.

What title has this queen but law's force?

And force must pull her down. Dryden.

They may be afraid to pull down ministers and favourites grown formidable. Dacourt.

7. To PULL up. To extirpate; to eradicate.

What censur'd, doubting thus of innate principles,
I may derive from men, who will be apt to call it pulling up the old foundations of knowledge, I cannot tell, I persuade myself, that the way I have pursued, being conformable to truth, lays the de-foundations sure. Lacke.

PU'LL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of pulling.

I awaked with a violent pull upon the ring,
which was fasten'd at the top of my box. Gulliver.

These commotions of the mind and body oppress the heart, whereby it is choked and obstructed in its pulsation.

PULSATOR. n. f. [from pulsio, Lat.] A striker; a beater.

PULSE. n. f. [pulsus, Lat.]

1. The motion of an artery as the blood is driven through it by the heart, and as it is perceived by the touch.

Pulse is thus accounted for: when the left ventricle of the heart contracts, and throws its blood into the great artery, the blood in the artery is not only thrust forward towards the extremities, but the channel of the artery is likewise dilated, when the impetus of the blood against the sides of the artery ceases; that is, when the left ventricle ceases to contract, then the spiral fibres of the artery, by their natural elasticity, return again to their former state, and contract the channel of the artery, till it is again dilated by the diastole of the heart; this diastole of the artery is called its pulse, and the time the spiral fibres are returning to their natural state, is the distance between two pulses: this pulse is in all the arteries of the body at the same time; an high pulse is either vehement or strong, but if the dilatation of the artery does not rise to its usual height, it is called a low or weak pulse; but if between its dilatations there passes more time than usual, it is called a slow pulse: again, if the coats of an artery feel harder than usual from any cause whatsoever, it is called an hard pulse; but if by any contrary cause they are softer, then it is called a soft pulse.

I think you, I bear the shears of destiny?
 Have I commandment on the pulse of life?

The property of the neighbouring kingdoms is not inferior to that of this, which, according to the pulse of states, is a great diminution of their health.

My body is from all diseases free;
 My temperate pulse does regularly beat.

If one drop of blood remain in the heart at every pulse, those, in many pulses, will grow to a considerable mass.

2. Oscillation; vibration; alternate expansion and contraction; alternate approach and recession.

The vibrations or pulses of this medium, that they may cause the alternate fits of early transition and early reflection, must be swifter than light, and by consequence above seven hundred thousand times swifter than sounds.

3. To feel one's pulse. To try or know one's mind artfully.

4. [from pull] Leguminous plants. Plants not reaped but pulled or plucked.

Looking in a glass, when you shut one eye, the pupil of the other, that is open, dilateth. Bacon.

Setting a candle before a child, bid him look upon it, and his pupil shall contract itself very much to exclude the light; as when after we have been some time in the dark, a bright light is suddenly brought in and set before us, all the pupils of our eyes have gradually contracted. Ray.

The uvea has a mucus power, and can dilate and contract that round hole in it, called the pupil of the eye. More.

The rays, which enter the eyes at several parts of the pupil, have several obliquities to the glasses.

I say there is no darkness but ignorance, in which thou art more puzzled than the Egyptians in their fog. Shakespeare.

Both armies of the enemy would have been puzzled what to have done. Clarendon.

A very shrewd disputant in those points is dexterous in puzzling others, if they be not thoroughly speculators in those great theories. Mor.

I shall purposely omit the mention of argument, which relate to humanity, as being not so easily intelligible, and therefore more apt to puzzle and amuse, than to convince. Wilkins.

He is perpetually puzzled and perplexed amidst his own blunders, and mistakes the sense of those he would confute. Addison.

Perions, who labour under real evils, will not puzzle themselves with conjectural ones. Clarissa.

He strikes each point with native force of mind,
While puzzled learning blunders far behind. Young.

1. To make intricate; to entangle.

The ways of heaven are dark and intricate,
Pasted in mazes, and perplex'd with error. Addison.

P Y R

These, as my guide informed me, were men of subtle tempers, and puzzled politicks, who would supply the place of real wisdom with cunning and avarice. Tatler.

I did not indeed at first imagine there was in it such a jargon of ideas, such an inconsistency of notions, such a confusion of particles, that rather puzzle than connect the sense, which in some places he seems to have named at, as I found upon my nearer perusal of it. Addison.

To PUZZLE. v. n. To be bewildered in one's own notions; to be awkward.

The servant is a puzzling fellow, that needs nothing.

PUZZLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Embarrassment; perplexity.

Throng numberless like that pygmean race
Beyond the Indian mount. Milton.

PYGMY. n. f. [pygme, Fr. pygmée.]

A dwarf; one of a nation fabled to be only three spans high, and after long wars to have been destroyed by cranes.

Any thing little.

If they deny the present spontaneous production of larger plants, and confine the earth to as pygmy burths in the vegetable kingdom, as they do in the other; yet surely in such a supposed universal decay of nature, even mankind itself that is now nourished, though not produced, by the earth, must have degenerated in stature and strength in every generation. Bentley.

PYLORUS. n. f. [πυλός.] The lower orifice of the stomach.

PYRAMID. n. f. [pyramide, Fr. pyramide,

The pyramidal idea of its flame, upon occasion of the candles, is what is in question. Locke.

PYRAMIDICALLY. adv. [from pyramidical.] In form of a pyramid.

Olympus is the largest, and therefore he makes it the basis upon which Ossa stands, that being the next to Olympus in magnitude, and Pelion being the least, is placed above Ossa, and thus they rise pyramidally. Brown.

PYRAMIS. n. f. A pyramid.

The form of a pyramis in flame, which we usually see, is merely by accident, and that the air about, by quenching the sides of the flame, contract it, and extend it into that form, for of itself it would be round, and therefore smoke is in the figure of a pyramis reversed; for the air quenches the flame, and receives the smoke. De Con.

PYRE. n. f. [pyra, Lat.] A pile to be burnt.

When his brave son upon the funeral pyre
He saw extended, and his heart on fire. Dryden.

With tender billet-doux he lights the pyre, are not so strictly or everlastingly commanded in scripture. Hooker.

Other creatures have not judgment to examine the quality of that which is done by them, and therefore in that they do, they neither can accuse nor approve themselves. Hooker.

Since the event of an action usually follows the nature or quality of it, and the quality follows the rule directing it, it concerns a man, in the framing of his actions, not to be deceived in the rule. South.

The power to produce any idea in our mind, I call quality of the subject, wherein that power is. Locke.

2. Property; accidental adjunct.

In the division of the kingdom, it appears not which of the dukes be valiantest; for qualities are so weighed, that civility in neither can make choice of either's moiety. Shakespeare.

No sensible qualities, as light and colour, heat and sound, can be indubitable in the bodies themselves absolutely considered, without a relation to our eyes and ears, and other organs of sense: these qualities are only the effects of our sensation, which arise from the different motions upon our nerves from objects without, according to their various modification and position. Bentley.

3. Particular efficacy.

O, nuckle is the powerful grace, that lies
In plants, herbs, flowers, and their true qualities. Shakespeare.

competently be removed from such, as of which you cannot hope to see an end. Hammond.

2. A brawl; a petty fight; a scuffle.

If I can fasten but one cup upon him,
With that which he hath drank to-night already,
He'll be as full of quarrel and offence,
As my young mistress's dog. Shakespeare.

3. A dispute; a contest.

The part which in this present quarrel tract against the current and stream of laws, was a quarrel while nothing feared. Hooker.

It were a matter of more trouble than necessity, to repeat in this quarrel what has been alleged by the worthies of our church. Hayley.

As if earth too narrow were for fate,
On open seas their quarrels they debate;
In hollow wood they floating armies bear,
And force rapacious winds to bring 'em near. Dryden.

4. A cause of debate.

I could not die any where so contented, as in the king's company; his cause being just and his quarrel honourable. Shakespeare.

If not in service of our God we fought,
In meaner quarrel if this sword were shaken,
Well might thou gather in the gentle thought
So far a prince's should not be forsaken. For.

I know this quest of yours and free intent
Was all in honour and devotion meant,
To the great mistress of your princely shrine. Milt.
An aged man in rural weeds,
Following, as I seem'd, the quest of some stray ewe. Milton.

One for all Myself expose, with lonely steps to tread
Th' unfounded deep, and the void immense
To search with wand'ring quest a place foretold Should be Milton.
'T would be not strange, should we find Paradise at this day where Adam left it; and I the rather note this, because I see there are some to earnest in quest of it. Woodward.

There's not an African,
That traverses our vast Numidian deserts
In quest of prey, and lives upon his bow,
But better practices these boasted virtues. Addison.
We see them active and vigilant in quest of delight. Spectator.

2. [for inquest.] An empannell'd jury.

person to the rack or question, according to the civil law, and not bring him to condemnation. Ayliffe.

8. State of being the subject of present inquiry.

If we being defendants do answer, that the ceremonies in question are godly, comely, decent, profitable for the church, then reply is childish and unorderly to say, that we deny and the thing in question, and show the poverty of our cause, the goodness whereof we are fain to beg that our adversaries would grant. Hooker.

If it would purchase six shillings and three-pence weighty money, he had proved the matter in question. Locke.

Not are these assertions that dropped from their pens by chance, but delivered by them in places where they profess to state the points in question.
Atterbury.

9. Endeavour; act of seeking. Not in use.
As it more concerns the Turk than Rhodes,
So may he with more facile question bear it;
For that it stands not in such warlike brace,
But altogether lacks the abilities
That Rhodes is dress'd in. Shakespeare.

I pray you think you question with a Jew;
You may as well use question with a wolf,
Why he hath made the ewe bleat for the lamb. Shakespeare.

To QUESTION. v. a. [questionner, Fr.]

1. To examine one by questions.
Question your royal thoughts, make the case
yourn;

Be now the father, and propose a son;
Hear your own dignity so much profan'd;
And then imagine me taking your part,
And in your pow'r so silencing your son Shakespeare.

But hark you, Kate,
I must not have you henceforth question me,
Whether I go. Shakespeare.

This contradiction is not so undeniably to be received as not at all to be questioned. Brown.

QUICKSILVER. n. f. [quick and silver; argentum vivum, Lat.]

Quicksilver, called mercury by the chymists, is a naturally fluid mineral, and the heaviest of all known bodies next to gold, and is more heavy and fluid, as it is more pure; it is wholly volatile in the fire, and may be driven up in vapour by a degree of heat very little greater than that of boiling water; it is the least tenacious of all bodies, and every smaller drop may be again divided by the lightest touch into a multitude of others. The specific gravity of pure mercury is to water as 14020 to 1000, and as it is the heaviest of all fluids, it is also the coldest, and when heated the hottest; the ancients all esteemed quicksilver a poison, nor was it brought into internal use till about two hundred and twenty years ago, which was first occasioned by the shepherds, who ventured to give it their sheep to kill worms, and as they received no hurt by it, it was soon concluded, that men might take it safely; in time, the diggers in the mines, when they found it crude, swallowed it in vast quantities, in order to sell it privately, when they had voided it by stool; but the miners seldom follow their occupation above three or four years, and the artificers, who have much dealing in it, are generally seized with paralytick disorders. Hill.

Cinnabar maketh a beautiful purple like unto a red rose; the best was wont to be made in labe of brimstone and quicksilver burnt. Peachment.

Pleasures are low; and fewer we enjoy; Pleasure, like quicksilver, is bright and coy;

We strive to grasp it with our utmost skill, Still it eludes us, and it glitters still.

It seiz'd at last, compute your nightly gains, What is it, but rank poison in your veins? Young.

QUICKSILVERED. adj. [from quicksilver.] Overlaid with quicksilver.

Metal is more difficult to polish than glass, and is afterwards very apt to be spoiled by tarnishing, and reflects not to much light as glass quicksilvered over does: I would propound to use instead of the metal a glass ground concave on the fore side, and as much convex on the back side, and quicksilvered over on the convex side. Newton.

QUIDAM. f. [Latin.] Somebody. Not used.

The envy of so many worthy quidams, which catch at the gaudium which to you alone is due, you will be persuaded to pluck out of the hateful darkness those to many excellent poems of yours, which he had, and bring them forth to eternal light. Spenser

QUINTESENCE. n. f. [quinta essentia, Latin.]

1. A fifth being.
From their gross matter she abstracts the forms,
And draws a kind of quintessence from things. Darwin.

The ethereal quintessence of heav'n
Flow upward, and beaded with various forms,
That row'd orbicular, and turn'd to fars. Milton.
They made fire, air, earth, and water, to be the five elements, of which all earthly things were compounded, and supposed the heavens to be a quintessence or fifth sort of body diamet from all these. Watts.

2. An extract from any thing, containing all its virtues in a small quantity.

To me what is this quintessence of dust? man delights not me, nor woman neither. Shakespeare.

Who can in memory, or wit, or will,
Or air, or fire, or earth, or water find?

What alchymist can draw, with all his skill,
The quintessence of these out of the mind? Darwin.

For I am a very dead thing,
In whom love wrought new alchymy,

For by his heart he did excrete,
A quintessence even from nothingness.

From dull privations and lean empurpled, Donne.
Paracelsus, by the help of an infernal cold, teaches to separate the quintessence of wine.

Let there be light! said God; and forthwith light

1. To discharge an obligation; to make even.

We will be quit of thine oath, which thou hast made us to swear. Infusus.

By this act, old tyrant,
I shall be quit with thee; while I was virtuous,
I was a stranger to thy blood, but now
Sure thou wilt love me for this horrid crime. Denh.

To John I ow'd great obligation;
But John, unhappily, thought fit
To publish it to all the nation;
Sure John and I are more than quit. Prior.

2. To set free.

Thou art quit from a thousand calamities; therefore let thy joy, which should be as great for thy freedom from them, as is thy sadness when thou feelest any of them, do the same cure upon thy discontent. Taylor.

Henceforth I fly not death, nor would prolong Life much; bent rather how I may be quit
Henceforth and cast off this cumbersome charge. Milt.

To quit you of this tear, you have already looked death in the face; what have you found so terrible in it? Wake.

3. To carry through; to discharge; to perform.

Never worthy prince a day did quit
With greater hazard, and with more renown. Dan.

4. To clear himself of an affair; with the reciprocal pronoun.

Sanctum hit quit himself
Like Sanction, and heroically hath himself
A life heroick, on his enemies
Fully reveng'd, hath left them 3 cars of mourning. Milton.

5. To repay; to requite.

He fair the knight saluted, louting low,
Who fair him quitted, as that courteous was. Spens.
Enkindle all the sparks of nature,
To quit this horrid act. Shakespeare.

6. To vacate obligations.

For our reward,
All our debts are paid; dangers of law,
Actions, decrees, judgments against us quitted. Ben Jonson.

One step higher

Would set me highest, and in a moment quit
The debt immense of endless gratitude. Milton.
7. To pay any obligation; to clear a debt;
to be quit.

They both did fail of their purpose, and got not so much as to quit their charges; because truth, which is the ferret of the most high God, whole-proper handy-work all things are, cannot be compacted with that wit and those senses which are our own. Hooker.

Does not the air feed the flame? and does not the flame at the same time warm and enlighten the air, and does not the earth quit scores with all the elements in the noble fruits that issue from it? South.
Still I shall hear and never quit the score,
Stunn'd with hourly Codrus' Theat' o'er and o'er. Dryden.

Iron works ought to be confined to certain places, where there is no conveyance for timber to places of want, so as to quit the cost of the carriage. Temple.

8. [Contracted from acquit.] To absolve;
to acquit.

Not further seek what their offences be,
Guileless I quit, guilty I set them free. Faust.

9. To pay.

Far other plaints, tears, and laments
The time, the place, and our estates require,
Think on thy sins, which man's old foe presents
Before that judge that quits each soul his hire. Faust.

caninum, Lat.] Dog-grass.

They are the best corn to grow on grounds subject to quitch-grass or other weeds. Motiv.

QUITTE. adj. [This is derived, by the etymologists, from quitta, discharged, free, French; which, however at first appearance unlikely, is much favoured by the original use of the word, which was in this combination, quite and clean; that is, with a clean riddance: its present signification was gradually introduced.] Completely; perfectly; totally; thoroughly.

Those latter exclude not the former quite and clean as unnecessary. Hooker.
He hath sold us, and quite devoured our money. Genes.

If some foreign ideas will offer themselves, reject them, and hinder them from running away with our thoughts quite from the subject in hand. Locke.
The same action may be aimed at different ends,
and arise from quite contrary principles. Spectator.

QUIT-RENT. n. f. [quit and rent.] Small rent reserved.

Such a tax would be insensible, and pass but as a small quit-rent, which every one would be content to pay towards the guard of the seas. Temple.

My old master, a little before his death, wished him joy of the estate which was falling to him, desiring him only to pay the gifts of charity he had lent as quit-rents upon the estate. Spectator.

QUITS. interj. [from quit.] An exclamation used when any thing is repayed and the parties become even.

QUITTANCE. n. f. [quittance, French.]

1. Discharge from a debt or obligation; an acquittance.

Now I am rememb'red, he scorn'd at me!
But that's all one, acquittance is no quittance. Shakespeare.

2. Recompence; return; repayment.

Mine eyes saw him in bloody rite,
Rend'ring forth quittance, wearied and outbreath'd,
To Henry Mountmouth. Shakespeare.

Plutus, the god of gold,
Is but his steward; no need but he repays
Sevenfold above itself; no gift to him
But breeds the giver a return exceeding
All use of quittance. Shakespeare.

We shall forget the office of our hand,
Sooner than quittance of desert and merit. Shakespeare.

TO QUITTANCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To repay; to recompence. Not used.
Embrace me then this opportunity,
As fitting best to quittance their deceit. Shakespeare.

QUITTER. n. f.

monly on the inside of the foot. Farrus's Dict.

QUIVER. n. f. [This word seems to be corrupted from couvrir, Fr. to cover.]
A case or sheath for arrows.

As Diuane hunted on a day,
She chanc'd to come where Cupid lay,
His quiver by his head,
One of his shafts she stole away,
And one of hers did close convey
Into the other's hand;

With that love wounded my love's heart,
But Diuane deals with Cupid's dart
Those works, with ease as much he did,
As you would open and shut your quiver-hid. Chapin.

Diana's nymphs would be arrayed in white, their arms and shoulders naked, bows in their hands, and quivers by their sides. Peacocks.

Her sounding quiver on her shoulder ty'd,
One hand a dart, and one a bow supply'd. Dryden.

QUIVER. adj. Nimble; active. Not in use.

There was a little quiver fellow, and he would manage you his piece thus; and he would about and about. Shakespeare.

TO QUIVER. v. n.

1. To quake; to play with a tremulous motion.

The birds chaunt melody on every bush,
The green leaves quiver with the cooling wind. Shakespeare.

O'er the pomel cast the knight,
Forward he flew, and pitching on his head,
He quiver'd with his feet, and lay for dead. Dent.

With what a spring his furious soul broke loose,
And left the lambs still quivering on the ground. Addison.

Eurydice with quiver'ing voice he mourn'd,
And Heber's banks Eurydice return'd. Gay.

Dancing sun-beams on the waters play'd,
And verdant alders torn'd a quiver'ing shade. Pope.

The lakes that quiver to the curling breeze. Pope.

2. To shiver; to shudder.

QUOTIDIAN. n. f. [febris quotidiana, Lat.]

A quotidian fever; a fever which returns every day.

If I could meet that fancymonger, I would give him counsel; for he seems to have the quotidian of love. Shakspeare

QUOTIENT. n. f. [quotient, Fr. quoties, Lat.] In arithmetick, is the number produced by the division of the two given numbers, the one by the other.

Cocker.

To make all the steps belonging to the same pair of inches of an equal height, they count for the height of the room in feet and inches, and multiply the feet by twelve, whole product, with the number of odd inches, gives the sum of the whole height in inches, which then they divide by the number of steps they intend to have in that height, and the quotient shall be the number of inches and parts that each step shall be high. Mason

Q U O

R.

R A B

R, is called the canine letter, because it is uttered with some resemblance to the growl or snarl of a cur: it has one constant sound in English, such as it has in other languages; as, red, rust, more, murder; in words derived from the Greek, it is followed by an h, rhaphis; r is never mute unless the second r may be accounted mute, where two rr are used; as myrrh.

TO RABATTE. v. n. [rabattre, Fr.] In falconry, to recover a hawk to the fist again. Ainsworth

RABATO. n. f. A neckband; a ruff.

Pok'd her rabatos, and survey'd her steel. Old Comedy

TO RABBIT. v. a. [rabatre, raboter, Fr.] To pare down pieces of wood so as to fit one another.

The rabbit plane is to cut part of the upper edge of a board straight or square down, that the edge of another board, cut down in the same manner, may fit into the square of the first; and this lapping over of two boards is called rabbiting. Mason

The window frame hath every one of its lights rabbetted on its outside about half an inch into the frame, and all these rabbets are grooved square. Mason

RABBIT. n. f. [from the verb.] A joint made by paring two pieces so that they wrap over one another.

Having drove in the hooks, they set the rabbets of the door within the rabbets of the door-post. Mason

R A B

RABBI. n. f. A doctor among the RABBINS. Jews.

Be not ye called rabbis; for one is your master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren. Matthew

The Hebrew rabbis say, that nature hath given man, for the pronouncing of all letters, the lips, the teeth, the tongue, the palate and throat. Camden's Remains

RABBIT. n. f. [rabbe, rabbikin, Dut.] A furry animal that lives on plants, and burrows in the ground.

I knew a wench married, as she went to the garden for partly to stul a rabbit. Shakspeare

A company of scholars, going to catch conies, carried one with them which had not much wit, and gave in charge, that if he saw any, he should be silent for fear of fear ing of them; but he no sooner espied a company of rabbits, but he cried aloud, ecce multi coniculi; which he had no sooner said, but the conies ran to their burrows; and he being checked by them for it, answered, Who would have thought that the rabbits understood Latin? Bacon

RABBIE. n. f. [rabula, Latin; rabulari, low Latin.] A tumultuous crowd; an assembly of low people.

Countrymen, will ye relent, and yield to morey, Or let a rabbie lead you to your deaths? Shakspeare

Go bring the rabbie here to this place. Shakspeare

Of these his several rabblements, betrayings, and stealing away of men's wives, came in all those ancient fables, and all that rabbie of Grecian forgeries. Raleigh

The better sort shew scornfully.

And often censures what the rabbie like. Roscommon

That profane, atheistical, epicurean rabbie, whom the whole nation fixings of, are not the wisest men in the world. South

To gratify the barbarous audience, I gave them a short rabbie scene, because the mob are represented by Plutarch and Polybius with the same character of balencis and cowardice. Dryden

R A C

In change of government, The rabbie rule their great oppressors fate, Do to tyrannical justice and revenge the state. Dryden

His enemies have been only able to make ill imputations upon the low and ignorant rabbie, and to put the dregs of the people in a ferment. Addison RABBLEMENT. n. f. [from rabbie.] Crowd; tumultuous assembly of mean people. Not in use.

A rude rabblement, Whose like he never saw, he durst not bide, But got his ready fied, and tust away 'gan ride. Spenser

The rabblement shouted, clapp'd their chop hands, and uttered a deal of foolish breath. Shakspeare

There will be always tyrants, murderers, thieves, traitors, and others of the same rabblement. Camden

RABID. adj. [rabidus, Lat.] Fierce; furious; mad.

RABINER. n. f. A kind of smaller ordinance. Ainsworth

RACE. n. f. [race, Fr. from radice, Lat.]

And proud like her of an immortal race. Dryden

Hence the long race of African thence come. Dryden

3. A generation; a collective family.

A race of youthful and unhandled coits,

Fighting and brawling. Shakspeare

4. A particular breed.

The race of moles, fit for the plough is bred.

Chapman.

Instead

Of spirits malign, & better race to bring Into their vacant room.

Milton.

In the races of mankind and families of the world, there remains not to one above another the least pretence to have the right of inheritance. Locke.

If they are all debas'd and willing slaves,
The young but breathing to grow grey in bondage,
And the old sinking to ignoble graves,
Of such a race no matter who is king.

Murphy.

5. RACE of ginger. [rayz de gengibre, Spanish.] A root or sprig of ginger.

6. A particular strength or taste of wine, applied by Temple to any extraordinary natural force of intellect.

Of gardens there may be forms wholly irregular, that may have more beauty than of others, but they must owe it to some extraordinary disposition of nature in the soil, or some great race of fertility or judgment in contrivance.

Temple.

7. [ras, Mandick.] Contest in running.

To describe races and games

Or tilting furniture.

Milton.

Stand forth, ye champions who the gunshot wield,
Or you the swiftest racers of the field;

Stand forth, ye wrestlers who these pastimes grace,
I wield the gunshot, and I run the race.

Pope.

8. Course on the feet.

The flight of many birds is swifter than the race of any beasts.

Bacon.

9. Progress; course.

It suddenly fell from an excess of favour, which many examples have taught them, never lost his force till it came to a headlong overthrow.

Sidney.

My race of glory run, and race of shame. Milt.

The great light of day yet wants to run
Much of his race through sleep.

Milton.

He safe return'd, the race of glory past,
Now to his friends embrace.

Pope.

10. Train; process.

An offensive war is made, which is unjust in the aggressor; the prosecution and race of the war carrieth the defendant to invade the ancient patrimony of the first aggressor, who is now turned defendant;
shall he sit down, and not put himself in defence?

Bacon.

The race of this war fell upon the loss of Ubin, which he re-obtain'd.

Bacon.

11. RACEHORSE. n. f. [race and horse.] Horse bred to run for prizes.

The reason Hudibras gives, why those, who can talk on trifles, speak with the greatest fluency, is, that the tongue is like a race horse, which runs the faster the less weight it carries.

Addison.

12. RACEMAT'ION. n. f. [racemus, Latin.]

Cluster, like that of grapes.

A cock will in one day fertilize the whole racem- ation or cluster of eggs, which are not excluded in many weeks after.

Brown.

13. RACEM'IOUS. adj. [racemus and fior,
Lat.] Bearing clusters.

His stumbling founder'd jade can trot as high
As any other Pegasus can fly;

So the dull eel moves nimbler in the mud,
Than all the swift-hun'd race of the pond.

Dorset.

A poet's form the plac'd before their eyes,
And had the nimblest racer seize the prize.

Pope.

14. RACINESS. n. f. [from racy.] The quality of being racy.

15. RACK. n. f. [racke, Dut. from racken, to stretch.]

1. An engine to torture.

Vex not his ghost; O let him pass! he hates him
That would, upon the rack of this rough world, Stretch him out longer.

Shakespeare.

Did ever any man upon the rack abuse himself, because he had received a cross answer from his mistress?

Taylor.

Let them feel the whip, the sword, the fire,
And in the tortures of the rack expire.

Addison.

2. Torture; extreme pain.

A fit of the stone puts a king to the rack, and makes him as miserable as it does the meanest subject.

Temple.

A cool behaviour sets him on the rack, and is interpreted as an influence of aversion or indifference.

Addison.

3. Any instrument by which extension is performed.

These bows, being somewhat like the long bows in use amongst us, were bent only by a man's immediate strength, without the help of any bender or rack that are used by others.

Watson.

4. A distaff; commonly a portable distaff, from which they spin by twirling a ball.

It is commonly spoken and written rack.

The fibres turn the wheel,

Empty the woolly rack, and fill the reel.

Dryden.

5. [racke, Dutch, a track.] The clouds as they are driven by the wind.

That which is now a horse, even with a thought
The rack dishorns, and makes it indistinct

As water is in water.

Shakespeare.

The great globe itself,
Yea, all, which it inherit, shall dissolve;

And, like this insubstantial pageant, faded,
Leave not a rack behind.

Shakespeare.

We often see against some storm,
A silence in the heav'n's, the rack stand still.

The bold winds speechless, and the out below

As hush as death.

Shakespeare.

The winds in the upper region, which move the clouds above, which we call the rack, and are not perceived below, pass without noise.

Bacon.

As windy winds contending in the sky,
With equal force of lungs their titles try;

They race, they roar: the doubtful rack of heav'n
Stands without motion, and the tide undriv'n.

Dryden.

6. [hynacca, the occiput, Saxon; racca, Mandick, hinges or joints.] A neck of mutton cut for the table.

7. A grate; the grate on which bacon is laid.

8. A wooden grate in which hay is placed for cattle.

Their bulls they send to pastures far,
Or hills, or feed them at full racks within.

Mary.

The best way to feed cattle with it, is to put it in racks, because of the great quantity they tread down.

Mortimer.

He bid the nimble hours
Bring forth the floods; the nimble hours obey:

From their tall racks the gen'rous steeds retire.

Ald.

9. Arrack; a spirituous liquor. See AR- RACK.

10. TO RACK. v. n. [from the noun.] To stream as clouds before the wind.

Three glorious funs, each one a perfect fun,
Not separated with the racking clouds,
But bound'd in a pale clear-flaming sky.

Shakespeare.

11. TO RACK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To torment by the rack.

Unhappy most like tortured me,
Their joints new set to be new rack'd again.

Cowley.

Hold, O dreadful sir,
You will not rack an innocent old man.

Dryden and Lee.

2. To torment; to harass.

The apostate: aye, though in pain,
Vaunting aloud, but rack'd with deep despair.

Milt.

3. To harass by exaction.

The landlords there shamefully rack their tenants, exact'ing of them, besides his covenants, what he pleaseth.

Spenser.

The commons had then rack'd; the clergy's bags
Are lank and lean with thy extortions.

Shakespeare.

He took possession of his just estate,
Not rack'd his tenants with increase of rent.

Dryden.

4. To scrow; to force to performance.

They racking and stretching scripture further than by God was meant, are drawn into sundry inconveniences.

Hooker.

The wisest among the heathens rack'd their wits, and cast about every way, managing every little argument to the utmost advantage.

Tillotson.

It was worth the while for the adversary to rack invention, and to call in all the weapons of learning and critical skill to assail them, if possible, and to wrest them out of our hands.

Waterland.

5. To stretch; to extend.

Nor have I money nor commodity

To raise a present sum;

Try what my credit can in Venice do,

That shall be rack'd even to the uttermost.

6. To defecate; to draw off from the lees.

I know not whence this word is derived in this sense; rein, German, is clear, pure, whence our word to rinse: this is perhaps of the same race.

It is common to draw wine or beer from the lees, which we call racking, whereby it will clarify and be sounder.

Some toll their cask about the cellar to rack with the lees, and, after a few days refection, rack it off.

7. RACK-RENT. n. f. [rack and rent.] Rent raised to the uttermost.

Have poor families been ruined by rack-rent, paid for the lands of the church?

8. RACK-RENTER. n. f. [rack and renter.]

One who pays the uttermost rent.

Though this be a quarter of his yearly income, and the public tax takes away one hundred; yet this influences not the yearly rent of the land, which the rack-renter or undertaker pays.

9. RACK'LE. n. f. [Of uncertain derivation;

Cassian derives it, after his custom, from caxx, the dash of fluctuation against the shore.]

1. An irregular clattering noise.

That the tennis court keeper knows better than I, it is a low ebb of linen with thee, when they keepest not racket there.

2. A confused talk. In burlesque language.

Ambition hath removed her lodging, and now the next door to faction, where they keep much racket, that the whole parish is disturbed and ever night in an uproar.

3. [raquette, Fr.] The instrument with which players at tennis strike the ball.

Whence perhaps all the other senses.

When we have match'd our rackets to their balls,
We will in Fimble play a set,
Shall strike his father's crown into the hazard.

10. RACKING. n. f.

The body, into which impression is made, cannot can yield backward or it cannot; if it can yield backward, then the impression made is a motion, as we see a stroke with a racket upon a ball, make it fly from it.

11. RACKON. n. f.

The rackoon is a New England animal, like a badger, having a tail like a fox, being clothed with a thick and deep fur: it sleeps in the day, under a hollow tree, and goes out at night, when the moon shines, to feed on the sea side, where it is hunted by dogs.

12. RACEY. adj. [perhaps from rayz, Spanish, a root.] Strong; flavoured; tasting of the soil.

Rich racy verses in which we
The soil, from which they come, taste, smell, and see.

RADDOCK, or ruddock. n. f. A bird; the redbreast.

The ruddock would,
With charitable bill, bring thee all this. Shaksp.

RADIANCY. } n. f. [radiare, Lat.] Spark.
RADIANCE. } ling lustre; glitter.

By the sacred radiance of the sun,
By all the operations of the orbs,
Here I disclaim all my paternal care, Shakspere.

Whether there be not too high an apprehension above its natural radiance, is not without just doubt, however it be granted a very splendid gem, and whose sparkles may somewhat resemble the glances of fire. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The Son
Gut with omnipotence, with radiance crown'd
Of majesty divine. Milton.

A glory surpassing the sun in its greatest radiance
Burnet.

RADIANT. adj. [radians, Lat.] Shining; brightly sparkling; emitting rays.

There was a sun of gold radiant upon the top,
and before, a small cherub of gold with wings displayed. Bacon.

Mark what radiant state she spreads,
In circle round her shining throne,
Shooting her beams like silver threads,
Thus, this is the alone. Milton's Arcades.

Virtue could see to do what virtue would
By her own radiant light, though sun and moon
Were in the flat sea sunk. Milton.

See the warlike host of heaven,
Radiant in glittering arms and beamy pride,
Go forth to succour truth below. Milton.

TO RADIATE. v. n. [radio, Latin.] To emit rays; to shine; to sparkle.

though with wit and parts their possessors could revenge God to send forth his light and his truth, yet now that revelation hath detached them, and that he hath been pleased to make them radiate in his word, men may recollect those scatter'd divine beams, and kindling with them the topicks proper to warm our affections, enflame holy zeal. Boyle.

Light radiates from luminous bodies directly to our eyes, and thus we see the sun or a flame; or it is reflected from other bodies, and thus we see a man or a picture. Locke.

RADIATED. adj. [radiatus, Lat.] Adorned with rays.

The radiated head of the phoenix gives us the meaning of a passage in Antony. Addison.

RADIATION. n. f. [radiatio, Lat. radiationis, Fr.]

1. Beamy lustre; emission of rays.

We have perspective houses, where we make demonstrations of all lights and radiations, and of all colours. Bacon.

Should I say I liv'd darker than were true,
Your radiation can all clouds subdue,
But one; 'tis best light to contemplate you. Donne.

2. Emission from a centre every way.

Sound parallel with in many things with the light,
and radiation of things visible. Bacon.

RADICAL. adj. [radical, Fr. from radix,
Latin.]

1. Primitive; original.

The differences, which are secondary, and proceed from these radical differences, are; plants are all figurate and determinate, which inanimate bodies are not. Bacon.

Such a radical truth, that God is, springing up together with the essence of the soul, and previous to all other thoughts, is not pretended to by philosophy. Hentley.

Implanted by nature.

The emission of the loose and adventitious moisture doth betray the radical moisture, and carries for company. Bacon.

VOL. II.

R A F

If the radical moisture of gold were separated, it might be contrived to burn without being consumed. Wilkins.

The sun beams render the humours hot, and dry up the radical moisture. Arbuthnot.

3. Serving to origination.

RADICALITY. n. f. [from radical.] Origination.

There may be equivocal seeds and hermaphroditical principles, that contain the radicality and power of different forms, thus, in the seeds of wheat, there both obscurely the femininity of dar-
nel. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

RADICALLY. adv. [from radical.] Originally; primitively.

It is no easy matter to determine the point of death in insects, who have not their vitalities radically confined into one part. Brown.

These great orbs thus radically bright,
Primitive founts, and origins of light
Enliven worlds deny'd to human sight. Prior.

RADICALNESS. n. f. [from radical.] The state of being radical.

TO RADICATE. v. a. [radicatus, from radix, Lat.] To root; to plant deeply and firmly.

Meditation will radicate these seeds, fix the transient gleam of light and warmth, confirm religious of good, and give them a durable consilience in the soul. Hammond.

Nor have we let fall our pen upon discouragement of unbelief, from radicating beliefs, and points of high prescription. Brown.

If the object stays not on the sense, it makes not impression enough to be remembered; but if it be repeated there, it leaves plenty enough of those images behind it, to strengthen the knowledge of the object: in which radicating knowledge, if the memory consist, there would be no need of referring those atoms in the brain. Glanville.

RADICATION. n. f. [radication, Fr. from radicate.] The act of taking root and fixing deep.

They that were to plant a church, were to deal with men of various inclinations, and of different habits of sin, and degrees of radication of those habits; and to each of these some proper application was to be made to cure their souls. Hammond.

RADICLE. n. f. [radicule, Fr. from radix, Lat.] That part of the seed of a plant, which, upon its vegetation, becomes its root. Quincy.

TO RAFFLE. v. n. [raffle, to snatch, Fr.]
To cast dice for a prize, for which every one lays down a stake.

Letters from Hammond give me an account, there is a late intimation there, under the name of a raffling shop. Tatler.

RAFFLE. n. f. [raffe, Fr. from the verb.]

A species of game or lottery, in which many stake a small part of the value of some single thing, in consideration of a chance to gain it.

The toy, brought to Rome in the third triumph of Pompey, being a pair of tables for gaming, made of two precious stones, three foot broad, and four foot long, would have made a fine raffle. Arbuthnot on Coins.

RAFT. n. f. [probably from ratia, Lat.] A RAFT. part. pass. of reave or raff. Spenser.

Torn; rent.

RAFTER. n. f. [rafter, Saxon; rafter, Dutch; corrupted, says Junius, from roof tree.] The secondary timbers of the house; the timbers which are let into the great beam.

The rafters of my body, bone,
Being full with you, the muscle, sinew, and vein,
Which tile this house, will come again. Deane.

Shepherd,

I trust thy honest offer'd courtesy,

Which oft is sooner found in lowly sheds

With smoky rafters, than in tapstry halls. Milton.

On them the Trojans cast

Stones, rafters, pillars, beams. Donham.

By Donams, king of Egypt, when he fled from his brother Remses, the use of shipping was first brought among the Grecians, who before that time knew no other way of crossing their narrow seas, but on beams or rafters tied to one another. Heylin.

From the East, a Belgian wind

His hostile breath through the dry rafters sent;

The flames impell'd. Dryden.

The roof began to mount aloft,

Aloft rose every beam and rafter,

The heavy wall chm'd slowly after. Swift.

RAFTERED. adj. [from rafter.] Built with rafters.

No raftered roofs with dance and labor soiled;

No noon tide bell invites the country round. Pope.

RAG. n. f. [hpacobe, torn, Sax. gao-e.]

1. A piece of cloth torn from the rest; a tatter.

Cowls, hoods, and habits, with their wearers tost,
And flutter'd into rags. Milton.

Rags are a great improvement of chalky land.

Mortimer.

2. Any thing rent and tattered; worn out clothes; proverbially, mean drest.

Fathers that wear rags,

Do make their children blind;

But fathers that bear bags,

Shall see their children kind. Shakspere.

They took from me

Both coat and cloak, and all things that might be

Grace in my habit; and in place, put on

These tatter'd rags. Chapman.

Worn like a cloth,

Gnawn into rags by the devouring moth. Sandys.

Content with poverty, my foul I am;

And virtue, though in rags, will keep me warm. Dryden.

3. A fragment of drest.

He had first matter seen undrest;

He took her naked all alone,

Before one rag of linn was on. Hudibras.

RAGAMUFFIN. n. f. [from rag and I know not what else.] A paltry mean fellow.

I have led my ragamuffins where they were perp'd; there's not three of my hundred and fifty left alive; and they are for the town's end to beg during life. Shakspere.

Shall we brook that paltry as
And feeble leonard, Hudibras,

With that more paltry ragamuffin,

Ralpho, vapouring and hallooing? Hudibras.

Attended with a crew of ragamuffins, she broke into his house, turned all things topsy-turvy, and then set it on fire. Swift.

RAGE. n. f. [rage, French.]

1. Violent anger; vehement fury.

This tiger-footed rage, when it shall find

The harm of unknown'd swiftness, will, too late,

The leaden pounds to's heels. Shakspere.

RAIN, n. f. [nen, Saxon.] The moisture that falls from the clouds.

When shall we three meet again, In thunder, lightning, or in rain? Shakespeare.

With strange rains, hails, and showers were persecuted. Hyman.

The lost clouds pour Into the sea an useless show'r, And the vast sailors curse the rain, For which poor farmers pray'd in vain. Locke.

Rain is water by the heat of the sun divided into very small parts ascending in the air, till entering the cold, it is condensed into clouds and descends in drops. Locke.

RAINFLOW. n. f. [rain and bow.] The iris; the semicircle of various colours which appears in showery weather.

Calling of the water in a most cunning manner, makes a perfect rainbow, not more pleasant to the eye than to the mind, so sensibly to see the proof of the heavenly iris. Sidney.

To add another hue unto the rainbow. Shaksp.
The rainbow is drawn like a nymph with large eyes, dispread in the form of a semicircle, the features of tawdry colours. Peacham.

They could not be ignorant of the promise of God never to drown the world, and the rainbow before their eyes to put them in mind of it. Brown.

This rainbow never appears but where it rains in the same time and may be made artificially by spouting up water, which may break aloft, and scatter in drops, and fall down like rain; for the sun, shining upon these drops, certainly causes the bow to appear to a spectator standing in a true position to the rain and sun: this bow is made by refraction of the sun's light in drops of falling rain. Newton.

The dome's high arch reflects the mingled blaze, And forms a rainbow of alternate rays. Pope.

Guy rainbow filks her mellow charms in fold, And thought of Lyce but herself is old. Young.

RAINDRIFT. n. f. [drift and rain.] Sax. rangifer, Lat. A deer with large horns, which, in the northern regions, draws sledges through the snow.

RAINSINESS. n. f. [from rainy.] The state of being showery.

RAIN-WATER. n. f. [rain and water.] Water not taken from springs, but falling from the clouds.

16. To occasion; to begin.
Raise not a false report. Erodus.

The common ferryman of Egypt, that waited over the dead bodies from Memphis, was made by the Greeks to be the ferryman of hell, and solemn stories raised after him. Brown.

Wantonness and pride
Raise out of friendship hostile deeds in peace. Milt.

17. To set up; to utter loudly.
All gaze, and all admire, and raise a shouting sound. Dryden.

Soon as the prince appears, they raise a cry. Dryden.

18. To collect; to obtain a certain sum.
Butam, once despoil'd, can raise
As ample sums, as Rome in Caesar's days. Arbuth.

I should not thus be bound,
If I had means, and could but raise five pound. Guy.

19. To collect; to assemble; to levy.
He out of small things could without end
Have rais'd incessant flames. Milton.

20. To give rise to.
Higher argument
Remains, sufficient of itself to raise
That name, unless years damp my wing. Milton.

21. To procure to be bred or propagated; as, he raised sheep; he raised wheat where none grew before.

22. To raise is, in all its senses, to elevate from low to high, from mean to illustrious, from obscure to famous, or to do something that may be by an easy figure referred to local elevation.

23. To raise paste. To form paste into pieces without a dish.
Miss Liddy can dance a jig, and raise paste. Spectator.

RAISER, n. f. [from raise.] He that raises.

And drinke the dark-deepe water of the spring,
Bright Arethusa, the most nourishing Raiser of hearts. Chapman.

Then shall stand up in his estate a raiser of taxes. Daniel.

They that are the first raisers of their houses, are most indulgent towards their children. Bacon.

He that boasts of his ancestors, the founders and raisers of a family, doth confide that he hath less virtue. Taylor.

Raiser of human kind! by nature call. Thomson.
Naked and helpless.

RAISIN. n. f. [racemus, Lat. raisin, Fr.] Raisins are the fruit of the vine suffered to remain on the tree till perfectly ripened, and then dried; grapes of every kind, preserved in this manner, are called raisins, but those dried in the sun are much sweeter and pleasanter than those dried in ovens; they are called jar raisins, from their being imported in earthen jars. Hill's Mat. Med.

Dried grapes or raisins, boiled in a convenient proportion of water, make a sweet liquor, which being sometimes distilled, affords an oil and spirit much like the raisin themselves. Boyle.

RAKE. n. f. [rastrum, Lat. pace, Saxon; rathe, Dutch.]

1. An instrument with teeth, by which the ground is divided, or light bodies are gathered up.

At multitudes down with the brembles and bracks,
And after abroad with thy forks and thy rakes. Tupper.

O that thy bounteous deity would please
To guide my rake upon the chinking sound
Of some vast treasure hidden under ground. Dryden.

He examines his face in the stream, combs his ruffled locks with a rake. Garth.

2. [racaille, Fr. the low rabble; or rekel, Dut. a worthless cur dog.] A loose, disorderly, vicious, wild, gay, thoughtless fellow; a man addicted to pleasure.

The next came with her son, who was the greatest rake in the place, but to much the mother's darling, that he left her husband for the sake of this graceless youth. Addison.

Rakes hate sober grave gentlewomen. Arbutnot.

Men, come to business, come to pleasure take,
But every woman is at heart a rake. Pope.

The fire flew finding his own virtues wake;
The mother begg'd the blessing of a rake. Pope.

To dance at public places, that tops and rakes might admire the fineness of her shape, and the beauty of her motions. Law.

TO RAKE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To gather with a rake.
Now barbe, and rake it, and set it on cocks. Tuff.

Harrow iron teeth shall every where Rake helmets up. May's Fugil's Georgicks.

It is but such a precious jewel as the world takes it for, yet they are forced to rake it out of dung-hills; and accordingly the apostle gives it a value suitable to its extract. South.

2. To clear with a rake.
As they rake the green appearing ground,
The ruffet has cock outed. Thomson.

3. To draw together by violence.
An eager desire to rake together whatsoever might prejudice or any way hinder the credit of apocryphal books, had caused the collectors pen to run as it were on wheels, that the mind, which should guide it, had no leisure to think. Hooker.

What pile of wealth hath he accumulated!
How, 't' th' name of this, Shakspere.

Does he rake this together?

A sport more formidable
Had rak'd together village rabble. Hudibras.

Ill-gotten goods are squandered away with as little confidence as they were raked together. L'Estrange.

4. To scour; to search with eager and vehement diligence.
The statesman rakes the town to find a plot. Swift.

5. To heap together and cover. To rake the fire is still used.

Here 't' th' lands
Ther I'll rake up the post unanctified
Of murtherous lechers. Shakspere.

The blazing wood may to the eye seem great,
But 't' the fire rak'd up that has the heat,
And keeps it long. Suckling.

To RAKE. v. n.

1. To search; to grope. It has always an idea of coarseness or noisomeness.

If you hide the crown
Even in your hearts, there will he rake for it.

It is as offensive, as to rake into a dung-hill.

Another finds the way to dye in grain;
Or for the golden ore in rivers rakes,
Then melts the mails

One is for raking in Chaucer for antiquated words, which are never to be revived, but when found or significance is wanting

After having made essays into it, as they do for coal in England, they rake into the most promising parts.

2. To pass with violence.

When Pas hand reached him to take,
The fox on knees and elbows tumbled down:
Pas could not stay, but over him did rake,
And crowd'd the earth with his fist touching crown.

The Belgians tack upon our rear,
And raking chate-guns through our ferns they send RA'KER. n. f. [from rake.] One that rakes.

RA'KEHELL. n. f. [Of this word the etymology is doubtful: as it is now written, it is apparently derived from rake and hell, and may aptly represent a wretch whose life is passed in places of lewdness and wickedness: Skinner derives it from racaille, French, the rabble; Junius, from rekel, Dutch, a mongrel dog.] A wild, worthless, dissolute, debauched, forry fellow.

Out of the fire of these rakehell horse boys, growing up in knavery and villainy, are their kera supplied.

The king, when he heard of Perkins's siege of Exeter, sat in sport, that the king of rakehells was landed in the West, and that he hoped now to see him.

A rakehell of the town, whose character is set off with excessive prodigality, prophaneity, intemperance, and lust, is rewarded with a lady of great fortune to repair his own, which his vices had almost ruined.

RA'KEHELLY. adj. [from rakehell.] Wild;
dissolute.

I scorn the rakehell rout of our ragged rhimers, which without learning boast, without judgment
jangle, and without reason rage and foam. Spenser.
No breaking of windows or glasses for sport,
And spoiling the goods for a rakehell's prank.

RA'KISH. adj. [from rake.] Loose; lewd;
dissolute.

There seldom can be peculiarity in the love of a raky heart.

To RA'LLY. v. a. [rallier, French.]

1. To put disordered or dispersed forces into order.

With rolled arms to try what may be yet
Regain'd in heav'n.

Publick arguing serves to wet the wits of heretics, and by shewing weak parts of their doctrines, prompts them to rally all their sophistry to fortify them with fallacy.

Luther deters men from solitariness; but he does not mean from a sober solitude, that rallies our scattered strengths, and prepares us against any new encounters from without.

2. [rallier, French.] To treat with slight contempt; to treat with satirical merriment.

Houeycomb has not lived a month, for these forty years, out of the smoke of London, and rallies me upon a country life.

If after the reading of this letter, you find yourself in a humour rather to rally and ridicule, than to comfort me, I desire you would throw it into the fire.

Strephon had long confest'd his midnight pain,
Which gay Corinna rally'd with disdain. Gay.
To RA'LLY. v. n.

1. To come together in a hurry.

If God should give this perverse man a new heaven and a new earth, springing out of nothing he might say, that innumerable parts of matter chanced just then to rally together, and to form themselves into this new world.

2. To come again into order.

The Grecians rally, and their pow'rs unite;
With fury charge us.

3. To exercise satirical merriment.

RAM. n. f. [ram, Saxon; ram, Dutch.]

1. A male sheep; in some provinces, a tup.
The ewes, being rank, turned to the rams.

An old sheep-whistling rogue, a ram tender.

Much like a well grown bel-weather or felted ram he shews.

You may draw the bones of a ram's head hung with strings of beads and ribbands.

A ram their off-spring, and a ram their meat.

2. Aries, the vernal sign.

The ram having pat'd the sea, serenely shines,
And leads the year.

3. An instrument with an iron head to batter walls.

Let not the piece of virtue,
Which is set as the cement of our love,
To keep it builded, be the ram to batter
The fortress of it.

Judas calling upon the Lord, who without any rams or engines of war did cast down Jericho, gave a fierce assault against the walls.

To RAM. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To drive with violence, as with a battering ram.

Ram thou thy faithful tidings in mine ears,
That long time have been barren.

Having no artillery nor engines, and finding that he could do no good by ramming with logs of timber, he let one of the gates on fire.

The charge with bullet, or paper wet and hard stopped, or with powder alone rammed in hard, maketh no great difference in the loudness of the report.

Here many poor people roll in vast balls of snow, which they ram together, and cover from the sunshine

2. To fill with any thing driven hard together.

As when that devilish iron engine wrought
In deepest hell, and fram'd by fur's skull,
With windy nitre and quick sulphur fraught,
And ram'd with bullet round ordain'd to kill.

He that proves the king,
To him will we prove loyal; till that time,
Have we ram'd up our gates against the world.

They mind the walls, laid the powder, and rammed the mouth, but the citizens made a countermine.

This into hollow engines, long and round,
Thick ram'd, at th' other bore with touch of fire

Diluted and intimate, shall send forth
Such implements of mischief, as shall dash
To pieces.

A ditch drawn between two parallel furrows, was filled with some found materials, and rammed to make the foundation solid.

RAMAGE. n. f. [from ramus, Latin.]

Branches of trees.

To RA'MAGE. v. a. See To RUMMAGE.

To RA'MBLE. v. n. [rammelen, Dutch, to rove loosely in lust; ramb, Swedish, to rove.] To rove loosely and irregularly;
to wander.

Shame contracts the spirits, fixes the ramblings of fancy, and gathers the man into himself.

He that is at liberty to ramble in perfect darkness, what is his liberty better than if driven up and down as a bubble by the wind?

Chapman has taken advantage of an immeas-

While you to smoothly turn and rowl our sphere,
That rapid motion does but rest appear. Dryden.

RAPIDITY. n. f. [rapidité, French; rapiditas, from rapidus, Latin.] Celerity; velocity; swiftness.

Where the words are not monosyllables, we make them to by our rapidity of pronunciation. Spectator

RAPIDLY. adv. [from rapid.] Swiftly; with quick motion.

RAPIDNESS. n. f. [from rapid.] Celerity; swiftness.

RAPIER. n. f. [rapier, French; so called from the quickness of its motion.] A small sword used only in thrusting.

I will turn thy falsehood to thy heart,
Where it was forged, with my rapier's point
Shakespeare

A soldier of far inferior strength may manage a rapier or fire-arms so expertly, as to be an overmatch for his adversary. Pope.

RAPIER-FISH. n. f. The swordfish.

The rapier-fish, called xiphus, grows sometimes to the length of five yards; the sword, which grows level from the front of the fish, is here about a yard long, at the basis four inches over, two-edged, and pointed exactly like a rapier: he preys on fishes, having first stabbed them with this sword. Grew.

RAPINE. n. f. [rapina, Latin; rapine, French.]

1. The act of plundering.

If the poverty of Scotland might, get the plenty of England cannot, excuse the envy and rapine of the church's rights. H. Charles.

The logic of a conquering sword may silence, but convince it cannot; its efficacy rather breeds aversion and abhorrence of that religion, whose first address is in blood and rapine. Decay of Pietty.

2. Violence; force.

Her least action overaw'd
His malice, and with rapine sweet bereav'd
His fierceness of its force intent. Milton.

RAPPER. n. f. [from rap.] One who strikes.

RAPPORT. n. f. [rappat, French.] Relation; reference; proportion. A word introduced by the innovator, Temple, but not copied by others.

Is obvious what rapport there is between the conceptions and languages in every country, and how great a difference this must make in the excellence of books. Temple.

TO RAP. v. n. [This word is used by Chapman for rap improperly, as appears from the participle, which from rapt would be not rapt; but rapted.] To ravish; to put in ecstasy.

You may safe approve,
How strong in insatiation to their love
Their rapturing tunes are. Odyssey.

RAPT. n. f. [from rap.] A trance; an ecstasy.

RAPTURE. n. f.

1. Violent seizure.

Soft ebbing; nor withstood them rock or hill. Milton.

RAPTURED. adj. [from rapture.] Ravished; transported. A bad word.

He drew
Such madning draughts of beauty to the soul,
As for a while cancell'd his raptur'd thought
With luxury too daring. Thomson.

RAPTUROUS. adj. [from rapture.] Ecstatic; transporting.

Nor will he be able to forbear a rapturous acknowledgment of the infinite wisdom and contrivance of the divine artificer. Blackmore.

Are the pleasures of it so inviting and rapturous?
Is a man bound to look out sharp to plague himself? Collier.

RARE. adj. [rarus, Latin; rare, French; in all the senses but the last.]

1. Scarce; uncommon; not frequent.

Live to be the show and gaze o' th' time,
We'll have thee, as our rarer monsters are,
Painted upon a pole. Shakespeare.

2. Excellent; incomparable; valuable to a degree seldom found.

This jealousy
Is for a precious creature; as fire's rare,
Must it be great; and as his person's mighty,
Must it be violent. Shakespeare.

On which was wrought the gods and giants fight,
Rare work, all fill'd with terror and delight. Cowley.

Above the rest I judge one beauty rare. Dryden.

3. Thinly scattered.

The cattle in the fields and meadows green,
Those rare and solitary, these in flocks
Pasturing at once, and in broad herds upstaring. Milton.

4. Thin; subtle; not dense.

They are of too tender and weak a nature, as they affect only such a rare and attenuate substance, as the spirit of living creatures. Bacon.

So eagerly the fiend
O'er bog or steep, through brant, rough, dense, or rare,
With head, hands, wings, or feet, pursues his way. Milton.

The dense and bright light of the circle will obscure the rare and weak light of these dark colours round about it, and render them almost insensible. Newton.

Bodies are much more rare and porous than is commonly believed: water is nineteen times lighter, and by consequence nineteen times rarer than gold, and gold is to rare, as very readily, and without the least opposition, to transmit the magnetic effluvia, and easily to admit quicksilver into its pores, and to let water pass through it. Newton.

5. Raw; not fully subdued by the fire.

This is often pronounced rear.

New-laid eggs, with Dancus' busy care,
Turn'd by a gentle fire, and roasted rare. Dryden.

RAREFACTION. n. f. [This word is formed in imitation of the foreign way of pronouncing rare show.] A show carried in a box.

The fashions of the town affect us just like a rare show, we have the curiosity to peep at them, and nothing more.

Of rare shows he sung, and Punch's feats he sung.

RAREFACTION. n. f. [rarefaction, French; from rarefy.] Extension of the parts of a body, that makes it take up more room than it did before: contrary to condensation.

The water within being rarefied, and by rarefaction resolved into wind, will force up the mercury.

When exhalations, shut up in the caverns of earth by rarefaction or compression, come to be straitened, they strive every way to get themselves at liberty.

RAREFIABLE. adj. [from rarefy.] Admitting rarefaction.

TO RAREFY. v. a. [rarefier, French; rarus and facio, Latin; rarefy were not proper.] To make thin: contrary to condense.

To the hot equator crowding fast,
Where highly rarefied the yielding air Admits their steam. Thomson.

TO RAREFY. v. n. To become thin.

Earth rarefies to dew; expanded more,
The subtil dew in air begins to soar. Dryden.

RARELY. adv. [from rare.]

1. Seldom; not often; not frequently.

His temperance in sleep resembled that of his meats; midnight being the usual time of his going to rest, and four or five, and very rarely half an hour of his rising.

Rarely they rise by virtue's aid, who lie Plung'd in the depth of helpless poverty. De la

Vanessa in her bloom,
Advanc'd like Atalanta's star,
But rarely seen, and seen from far. Southey.

2. Finely; nicely; accurately. This is now seldom used but ironically.

How rarely does it meet with this time's grace,
When man was will'd to love his enemies. Shakespeare.

RARENESS. n. f. [from rare.]

1. Uncommonness; state of happenance seldom; infrequency.

Ticking is most in the soles, arm-holes, &c. sides: the cause is the thinness of the skin, joints with the rareness of being touch'd there. Tickling is a light motion of the spirits, which the nets of the skin, the fuddennets and rareness touch, doth further. Bacon.

For the rareness and rare effect of that poem I'll insert it as presented. Clarendon.

Of my heart I now a present make:
Accept it as when early fruit we found,
And let the rareness of the small gift commend. Pope.

2. Value arising from scarcity.

Roses set in a pool, supported with force, is matter of rareness and pleasures though of no use.

To worthiest things,
Virtue, art, beauty, fortune, now I see Rareness or use, not nature, value brings. De la

3. Thinness; tenuity.

4. Distance from each other; thinness.

RARITY. n. f. [rarité, French; rarius, Latin.]

1. Uncommonness; infrequency.

Far from being fond of any flower for its rarity, if I meet with any in a field which pleases me, I give it a place in my garden. Spenser.

2. A thing valued for its scarcity.

Sorrow would be a rarity most beloved, if all could so become it.

It would be a rarity worth the seeing, could one show us such a thing as a perfectly reasonable enemy. Southey.

I saw three rarities of different kinds, which pleased me more than any other shows of the kind.

3. Thinness, subtilty: the contrary to density.

R A S

Rasies, under the same outward bulk, have a greater thickness and expansion, or thickness and solidity, which terms, in English, do not signify fully those differences of quantity; therefore I will do it under the names of rarity and density. Digby.

This I do, not to draw any argument against them from the universal rest or accurately equal diffusion of matter, but only that I may better demonstrate the great rarity and tenuity of their imaginary class. Bentley.

RASCAL. n. f. [rajcal, Saxon, a lean beast.]

1. A mean fellow; a scoundrel; a forry wretch.

For the rascal commons, left he cared. Spenser.
And when him lit the rascal routs appal,
Men into stones therewith he could transfigure. Spenser.

When Marcus Brutus grow so covetous
To lock such rajcal counters from his friends;
He ready, gods, with all your thunder-bolts,
Bath him to pieces. Shakespeare.

The rajcal people, thirsting after prey,
Join with the traitor. Shakespeare.

But for our gentlemen,
The mouse ne'er shun'd the cat, as they did budge
From rajcals worse than they. Shakespeare.

I am secur'd to rob in that thief's company; the rajcal hath remov'd my horse. Shakespeare.

Scoundrels are insolent to their superiors; but it does not become a man of honour to contend with mean rajcals. L'Estrange.

Did I not see you, rajcal, did I not
When you lay siug to snap young Damon's goat?
Dryden.

I have sense, to serve my turn, in store,
And he's a rajcal who pretends to more. Dryden.

The poor girl provoked told him he lyed like a rajcal. Swift.

2. RASCAL deer, are still mentioned for lean deer.

RASCALION. n. f. [from rajcal.] One of the lowest people.

That proud dame
U'd him for like a base rajcalion,
That old Pig—what d'y'e call him—malien,
That cut his mistress out of stone,
Had not to hard a hearted one. Hudibras.

RASCALITY. n. f. [from rajcal.] The low mean people.

Pretended philosophers judge as ignorantly in their way, as the rajcality in theirs. Glanville.
Jeroboam having procured his people gods, the next thing was to provide priests; hereupon, to the calves he adds a commission, for the approving, trying, and admitting the rajcality and lowest of the people to minister in that service. South.

RASCALLY. adj. [from rajcal.] Mean;
worthless.

Would't thou not be glad to have the niggardly rajcally sheepster come by some notable shame?
Shakespeare.

Our rajcally porter is fallen fast asleep with the black cloth and sponces, or we might have been taking up by this time. Swift.

To RASE. v. a. [This word is written rase or raze: I would write rase, when it signifies to strike slightly, perfringere; and raze, when it signifies to ruin, delere; razer,
Fr. rasis, Lat.]

1. To skim; to strike on the surface.

He certifies your lordship, that this night
He dreamt the bear had *raze*d off his helm. Shaksp.
Was he not in the nearest neighbourhood to death; and might not the bullet, that *raze*d his cheek, have gone into his head. South.

2. To overthrow; to destroy; to root up.

Her battering engines bent to raze some city.
Milton.

3. To blot out by rasure; to erase.

Though of their names in heavenly records now
No memorial, blotted out and *raze*d. Milton.

2. A slight wound.

RASH. adj. [rajsh, Dutch.]

1. Hasty; violent; precipitate; acting without caution or reflection.

This is to be bold without shame, rajsh without skill, full of words without wit. Ajcham.

Blas't her pride, O ye blest gods! so will you wish on me, when the rajsh mood is on me. Shakespeare.

Be not rajsh with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any thing before God; for God is in heaven, and thou upon earth; therefore let thy words be few. Eccelesiasticus.

Her rajsh hand in evil hour,
Forth reaching to the fruit, she pluck'd, she eat.
Milton.

2. Hasty; requiring haste. Not in use.

I have scarce leisure to salute you,
My matter is so rajsh. Shakespeare.

shortly have a raisher on the coals for money.
Shakespeare.

White and black was all her homely cheer,
And rajshes of ling'd bacon on the coals. Dryden.

Quenches his thirst with ale in nut-brown bowls,
And takes the hasty raisher from the coals. Ang.

RASHLY. adv. [from rajsh.] Hastily; violently;
without due consideration.

This expedition was by York and Talbot Too rajshly plotted. Shakespeare.

Men are not rajshly to take that for done, which is not done. Bacon.

He that doth any thing rajshly, must do it willingly;
for he was free to deliberate or not. L'Estrange.

Declare the secret villain,
The wretch so meanly hafe to injure Phædra,
So rajshly brave to dare the sword of Theseus.
Smith.

RASHNESS. n. f. [from rajsh.] Foolish contempt of danger; inconsiderate heat of temper; precipitation; temerity.

Who seeth not what sentence it shall enforce us to give against all churches in the world; in as much as there is not one, but hath had many things established in it, which though the scripture did never command, yet for us to condemn were rajsh-ness. Hooker.

Nature to youth hot rajshness doth dispence,
But with cold prudence age doth recompence.
Denham.

In so speaking, we offend indeed against truth;
yet we offend not properly by falshood, which is a speaking against our thoughts; but by rajshness, which is an affirming or denying, before we have sufficiently informed ourselves. South.

The vain Morat by his own rajshness wrought,
Too soon discover'd his ambitious thought.
Believ'd me his, because I spoke him fair. Dryden.

RASP. n. f. [raspo, Ital.] A delicious berry that grows on a species of the bramble;

a raspberry.

Set forre amongst rasps, and the rasps will be the smaller. Bacon.

Now will the corinths, now the rasps supply
Delicious draughts, when prest to wines. Philipp.

To RASP. v. a. [raspen, Dut. rasper, Fr.]

raspare, Ital.] To rub to powder with a very rough file.

Some authors have advis'd the rasping of these bones; but in this case it is needless. Wifeman.

Having prepared hard woods and ivory for the lathe with rasping, they pitch it between the pikes.
Mazon.

RASP. n. f. [from the verb.] A large rough file commonly used to wear away wood.

R A T

Case-hardening is used by file-cutters, when they make coarse files, and generally most rasps have formerly been made of iron and case-hardened.
Mazon.

RASPATORY. n. f. [raspatoir, Fr. from rasp.] A surgeon's rasp.

I put into his mouth a raspatory, and pulled away the corrupt flesh, and with cauterics burnt it to a crust. Wifeman.

RASPBERRY, or Raspberry. n. f. A kind of berry.

Raspberries are of three sorts; the common wild one, the large red garden raspberry, which is one of the pleasantest of fruits, and the white, which is little inferior to the red. Mortimer.

peration of rasurf. Ayliffe.

RAT. n. f. [ratte, Dut. rat, Fr. ratta, Span.]

An animal of the mouse kind that infests houses and ships.

Our natures do pursue,
Like rats that run down their proper bane. Shaksp.

Make you ready your stiff butts and clubs,
Rome and her rats are at the point of battle. Shaksp.

I have seen the time, with my long sword I would have made you four tall fellows skip like rats. Shakespeare.

Thus horses will knable at walls, and rats will gnaw iron. Brown.

If in despair he goes out of the way like a rat with a dose of arsenick, why he dies nobly.
Dennis.

To smell a RAT. To be put on the watch by suspicion, as the cat by the scent of a rat; to suspect danger.

Quoth Hudibras, I smell a rat,
Ralpho, thou dost prevaricate. Hudibras.

RATABLE. adj. [from rate.] Set at a certain value.

The Dames brought in a reckoning of money by ones, per ones; I collect out of the abbey-book of Burton, that twenty one were ratable to two marks of silver. C Camden.

RATABLELY. adv. Proportionably.

Many times there is no proportion of shot and powder allowed ratablely by that quantity of the great ordnance. Ruleigh.

wheel, which serves to lift up the de-tents every hour, and thereby make the clock strike. Bailey.

RATE. n. f. [ratas, Lat. rate, old Fr.]

1. Price fixed on any thing.

How many things do we value, because they come at dear rates from Japan and China, which if they were our own manufacture, common to be had, and for a little money, would be neglected!
Locke.

I'll not betray the glory of my name,
'Tis not for me, who have prefer'd a state,
To buy an empire at so bale a rate. Dryden.

The price of land has never changed, the several changes have been made in the rate of interest by law, nor now that the rate of interest is by law the same, is the price of land every where the same. Locke.

2. Allowance settled.

His allowance was a continual allowance, a daily rate for every day. 2 Kings.

They oblig'd themselves to remit after the rate of twelve hundred thousand pounds sterling per annum, divided into so many monthly payments.
Addison.

3. Degree; comparative height or value.

I am a spirit of no common rate;
The summer still doth tend upon my state. Shaksp.
In this did his holiness and godliness appear above the rate and pitch of other men, in that he was so infinitely merciful. Calamy.

To which relation whatsoever is done agreeably, is morally and essentially good; and whatsoever is done otherwise, is at the same rate morally evil. South.

4. Quantity assignable.

Is goodly form comes on the enemy;
And by the ground they hide, I judge their number Upon or near the rate of thirty thousand. Shaksp.

5. That which sets value; principle on which value is set.

Heretofore the rate and standard of wit was very different from what it is now-a-days: no man was then accounted a wit for speaking such things, as deprived to have the tongue cut out. South.

A virtuous heathen is, at this rate, as happy as a virtuous christian. Atterbury.

6. Manner of doing any thing; degree to which any thing is done.

I have disabled mine estate,
By shewing something a more swelling port,
Than my faint means would grant continuance;
Nor do I now make mean to be abridged
From such a noble rate. Shakspere.

Many of the horse could not march at that rate,
nor come up soon enough. Clarendon.

Tom hating his dislike of some trade his mistress had him, the asked him how he would talk to her after marriage, if he talked at this rate before? Idly.

7. Tax imposed by the parish.

They paid the church and parish rate,
And took, but read not the receipt. Prior.

To RATE, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To value at a certain price.
I freely told you, all the wealth I had Run in my veins, I was a gentleman;
And yet, dear lady,
Rating myself as nothing, you shall see
How much I was a braggart. Shakspere.

We may there be instructed, how to name and rate all goods, by those that will concentrate into felicity. Boyle.

You seem not high enough your joys to rate,
You stand indebted a vast sum to fate,
And should large thanks for the great blessing pay. Dryden.

2. [reita, Islandick.] To chide hastily and vehemently.

Go rate thy minions, proud insulting boy;
Becomes it thee to be thus bold in terms
Before thy sovereign? Shakspere.

An old lord of the council rated me the other day in the street about you, sir. Shakspere.

What is all that a man enjoys, from a year's confero, comparable to what he feels for one hour when his conscience shall take him aside and rate him by himself? South.

If words are sometimes to be used, they ought to be grave, kind, and sober, representing the ill or unbecomingness of the faults, rather than a hasty rating of the child for it. Locke.

To RATE, v. n. To make an estimate.

In rating when things are thus little and frivolous, we must not judge by our own pride and passions, which count nothing little, but aggrandize every slight or injury that is done to ourselves. Acutevell.

RATH, n. f. A hill. I know not whence derived.

There is a great use among the Irish, to make great assemblies upon a rath or hill, there to parley about matters and wrongs between townships or private persons. Spenfer.

RATH, adj. [rath, Sax.-quickly.] Early; coming before the usual time.

This is my summer worn away and wasted,
Thus is my harvest hasten'd all to rathes,
The ear, that huddled fair, is burnt and blasted,
And all my hoped gain is turn'd to scathe. Spenjer.
Rath ripe are some, and some of later kind,
Of golden fower, and some of purple rind. May.

Bring the rath primrose that forsaken dies.
The tufed crow-toe and pale jessamine. Milton.

RATHER, adv. [This is a comparative from rath; rath, Sax. soon. Now out of use. One may still say, by the same form of speaking, I will sooner do this than that; that is, I like better to do this.]

1. More willingly; with better liking.

Almighty God deſireth not the death of a sinner, but rather that he should turn from his wickedness and live. Common Prayer.

2. Preferably to the other; with better reason.

'Tis rather to be thought, that an heir had no such right by divine institution, than that God should give such a right, but yet leave it undeterminate who such heir is. Locke.

3. In a greater degree than otherwise.

He fought through the world, but fought in vain,
And no where finding, rather fear'd her slain. Dryd.

4. More properly.

This is an art,
Which does mend nature, change it rather, but
The art itself is nature. Shakspere.

5. Especially.

You are come to me in a happy time,
The rather for I have some sport in hand. Shaksp.

6. To have RATHER. [Thus is, I think, a barbarous exprellion of late intrusion into our language, for which it is better to say will rather.] To desire in preference.

'Tis with reluctancy he is provoked by our impenitence to apply the discipline of severity; he had rather mankind should adore him as their patron and benefactor. Rogers.

RATIFICATION, n. f. [ratification, Fr. from ratify.] The act of ratifying; confirmation.

RATIFIER, n. f. [from ratify.] The person or thing that ratifies.

They cry, "chafe we Lucretia for our king:"
The ratifiers and props of every word,
Caps, hands, and tongues applaud it to the clouds. Shakspere.

To RATIFY, v. a. [ratum facio, Latin.]

To confirm; to settle; to establish.

The church being a body which dieth not, hath always power, as occasion requireth, not less to ordain that which never was, than to ratify what hath been before. Hooker.

By the help of these, with him above

To ratify the work, we may again

Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights. Shaksp.

We have rat'ed upon them the borders of Judea. 1 Maccabees.

God ratified their prayers by the judgment brought down upon the head of him whom they prayed against. South.

Tell me, my friend, from whence hadst thou the skull,

So nicely to distinguish good from ill?

And what thou art to follow, what to fly,

This to condemn, and that to ratify? Dryden.

RATIO, n. f. [Lat.] Proportion.

Whatever inclinations the rays have to the plane of incidence, the sine of the angle of incidence of every ray, considered apart, shall have to the sine of the angle of refraction a constant ratio. Cheyne.

To RATIOCINATE, v. n. [ratiocinor,
Lat.] To reason; to argue.

RATIOCINATION, n. f. [ratiocinatio, Lat.]

The act of reasoning; the act of deducing consequences from premises.

In simple terms, exprelling the open notions of things, which the second act of reason compoundeth into propositions, and the last into syllogisms and forms of demonstration. Brown.

The difference of that connexion or dependence which there is between several propositions, whereby we are enabled to infer one proposition from another, which is called ratiocination or discourse. Wilkins.
Can any kind of ratiocination allow Christ all the marks of the Messiah, and yet deny him to be the Messiah? South.

Such an interposition would be self-evident without any ratiocination or study, and could not fail constantly to exert its energy in their minds. Beatty.

RATIOCINATIVE, adj. [from ratiocinate]

Argumentative; advancing by process of discourse.

Some confutations are so intimately and evidently connexed to, or found in the premises, that the conclusion is attained quasi per saltum, and without any thing of ratiocinative process, even as the eye sees his object immediately, and without any pre-

RATIONAL, adj. [rationalis, Latin.]

1. Having the power of reasoning.

God decreed to create man after his own image,
a free and rational agent. Hammond.

As that which hath a fitness to promote the welfare of many considered as a sensitive being, is filed natural good; so that which hath a fitness to promote the welfare of man, as a rational, voluntary and free agent, is filed moral good; and the contrary to it moral evil. Wilkins.

If it is our glory and happiness to have a rational nature, that is endued with wisdom and reason, that is capable of imitating the divine nature, then a man must be our glory and happiness to improve our reason and wisdom, to act up to the excellency of our rational nature, and to imitate God in all our actions, to the utmost of our power. Law.

2. Agreeable to reason.

What higher in her society thou find'st
Attractive, humane, rational, love still. Milton.

When the conclusion is deduced from the unerring dictates of our faculties, we say the inference is rational. Glennville.

If your arguments be rational, offer them in a moving manner as the nature of the subject will admit; but beware of letting the pathetick part swallow up the rational. Swift.

3. Wise; judicious: as, a rational man.

RATIONALE, n. f. [from ratio, Lat.] A detail with reasons: as, Dr. Sparrow's Rationale of the Common Prayer.

RATIONALIST, n. f. [from rational.] One who proceeds in his disquisitions and practice wholly upon reason.

He often used this comparison; the empirical philosophers are like to physicians; they only lay up and use their store: the rationalists are like to spiders; they spin all out of their own bowels: but give me a philosopher, who, like the bee, hath a middle faculty, gathering from abroad, and digesting that which is gathered by his own virtue. Bacon.

RATIONALITY, n. f. [from rational.]

1. The power of reasoning.

When God has made rationality the common portion of mankind, how came it to be thus included? Government of the Tongue.

2. Reasonableness.

In human occurrences, there have been many well directed intentions, whose rationalities will never bear a rigid examination. Brown.

RATIONALLY, adv. [from rational.] Reasonably; with reason.

Upon the proposal of an agreeable object, it may rationally be conjectured, that a man's choice will rather incline him to accept than to refuse it. South.

RATIONALNESS, n. f. [from rational.]

The state of being rational.

RATSBANE, n. f. [rat and bane.] Poison for rats; arsenick.

He would throw ratsbane up and down a house,
where children might come at it. L'Estrange.

When murder's out, what vice can we advance?
Unless the new-found poisoning trick of France.

And when their art of ratsbane we have got,
By way of thanks, we'll send 'em o'er our plot. Dr.

I can hardly believe the relation of his last poisoned, but such might do it, though ratsbane would not. Swift to Pope.

RATTEN, n. f. A kind of fluff.

We'll rig in Meath-street Egypt's haughty queen,
And Anthony shall court her in ratten. Swift.
